

ACTION AGAINST BCCI

WORLDWIDE IMPLICATIONS

Global reach of 'auditor's nightmare'

By Richard Donkin

BEHIND the doors which slammed shut yesterday on the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, one of the world's most mysterious banks, could lie one of the great banking scandals of the century.

Courted by the rich and the powerful throughout east and west, its founder, Mr. Agha Hasan Abedi, created an empire which stretched across 73 countries.

The bank, which had become an auditor's nightmare, was represented by some of the most influential Democrats in the US, and linked to former and existing prime ministers of scores of third world countries and to the most powerful and wealthy in the Middle East.

Last year it pleaded guilty to a money-laundering scheme masterminded in part by a BCCI officer named as the personal banker to General Manuel Noriega, Panama's deposed leader, who stands accused of drug running. More recently it has been accused of secretly controlling First American Bankshares, Washington's biggest bank.

The concept of BCCI was hatched at a meeting in Beirut in 1972 between Mr. Abedi and several Arab oil sheikhs. Mr. Abedi had a single ambition, to make BCCI the world's largest bank. He cultivated a number of the Gulf's wealthiest potentates during his time as head of the United Bank in Pakistan.

Building his first banking empire during the 1960s, the Lucknow-born Mr. Abedi would organise hunting trips and camel races for his Arab friends. Occasionally more exotic distractions were provided. This was before the oil boom days. The sheikhs did not forget him in his time of need.

BCCI was launched on a paid-in capital of $2.5bn in 1972. Bank America took 25 per cent of the initial equity, increasing its share to 30 per cent before divesting completely between 1979 and 1980.

Bank of America's motive had been to gain access to the Middle East market. This was BCCI's great success. It won instant street credibility. When Bank of America pulled out, partly because of concerns that it could not gain access to the books of all BCCI's operations, Mr. Abedi's bank was already boasting assets of $20bn in more than 400 offices worldwide.

Closed encounter: a customer is turned away at BCCI's Leadenhall branch

It grew rapidly throughout the '70s until it had a presence in 73 countries.

But it never obtained a full banking licence in the US. This did not matter much because BCCI was able to operate as a bank in the US through its relationship with First American Bankshares.

A close relationship between the two banks had been recognised for many years, but it was only recently that federal investigators discovered that First American had been bought by two shell corporations using loans from BCCI which were then taken as collateral.

Some big names associated with the Democratic Party have been embroiled in what has been a growing scandal in the US. Mr. Clark Clifford, a Washington lawyer and defence secretary in the Johnson administration is the chairman of First American Bankshares. His president and right-hand man is Mr. Robert Altman, a lawyer, but was perhaps better known in the US as the man who is married to Linda Carter of the Wonder Woman television series.

The US authorities took a long time to wake up to BCCI. Some of the bank's officers had been prosecuted for laundering drug money as early as 1980 but it was not until the US customs staged an elaborate sting operation in October 1989 that BCCI's involvement in money laundering became widely known.

When British customs moved on the Leadenhall Street, London, headquarters of BCCI in 1988 they took away documents which showed that General Noriega had deposited funds at the bank.

What customs officers never found were two numbered accounts that General Noriega had also held in BCCI's Cannon Street Branch for many years.

One former manager of the bank claims that the Palestinian terrorist organisation headed by Abu Nidal also held an account at BCCI.

A confidential report completed in August 1989 for a large UK-based finance house raised the possibility that one of BCCI's branches laundered money raised by Palestinian groups.

The structure of BCCI was made deliberately complicated. While it was supported mainly by Arab shareholders it was registered in Luxembourg yet ran its worldwide operations from London. Its operations came under 68 national central banks, leading to a BCCI claim that it was the most regulated bank in the world.

In practice this meant that it was very difficult for any banking authority to build a complete picture of the bank.

Closed encounter: a customer is turned away at BCCI's Leadenhall branch

In May 1988 the central banks of the four European countries where BCCI had its greatest presence, the UK, Luxembourg, Spain and Switzerland, formed a college of regulators which met periodically to discuss nothing but BCCI. Later the group was expanded to take in the Cayman Islands which, according to one of its former executives, was used by BCCI to park some of the funds it wanted to withdraw from the rest of the world.

One strange thing about Mr. Abedi's leadership is that he always claimed that he had no personal holding in the bank.

Among the more visible shareholdings in the 1980s were those held by Sheikh Zayed and a 20 per cent stake that used to be held by the Bin Mahfouz family, probably the richest commoners in Saudi Arabia.

The Mahfouz originally bought a 22 per cent stake that had been held by Mr. Gaith Pharam, a US-based investor and broker who bought the National Bank of Georgia from Mr. Bert Lance in 1978 and sold it to First American Bankshares in 1987. He also bought the Independence Bank in California, now believed to be another vehicle for BCCI.

Time and again during the 80s the bank leaned on its Arab benefactors for fresh capital. In 1985 Khalid Salem Bin Mahfouz agreed to underwrite a $150m loss on options. The group needed to resort to its reserves, however, to cover losses of $75m in 1984 and $55m in 1986.

The Mahfouz patience ran out in 1989/90 and the bank resorted to the goodwill of the al-Nahyan family, the richest and most powerful clan in the United Arab Emirates.

It was the long-standing relationship between Mr. Abedi and Sheikh Zayed, the ruler of the United Arab Emirates, which had ensured the creation of the bank in the first place. Sheikh Zayed ploughed nearly $1bn into the bank in 1990 alone by taking up the Mahfouz shareholding, increasing his family stake to 71 per cent and injecting fresh capital.

The bank had losses of $400m in 1989 and was forced to make provisions of $600m for bad debt. The losses forced BCCI into a drastic restructuring programme but it found difficulty selling many of its bank premises and some of its operations it wanted to scale down. Its whole Colombian network went up for sale but could find no takers.

Faced with losses expected to be in the region of $450m in the accounts of 1990, already seven months late, BCCI was planning a radical rationalisation, one reason why the Bank of England and other regulators have thought it time to move in.

The bank wanted to liquidate its existing operation and reform in three separate banking entities covering Europe, Asia and the Middle East. According to a source within the bank it had reached a "very advanced stage" in negotiating with the Bank of England for UK incorporation. The Bank of England had other ideas.

OTHER BANKS

Losses of $2bn are forecast

By Tracy Corrigan

THE FREEZING of BCCI's assets may have left other banks around the world exposed to losses of about $2bn ($1.25bn), according to estimates by the Bank of England yesterday.

"I do not believe that the interbank and market exposure is of a scale likely to cause difficulties," said Mr. Robin Leigh-Pemberton, governor of the Bank of England.

Of the $2bn figure, about $150m is believed to be owed by BCCI's London operation, of which about $50m is due to banks. It is understood that Barclays, NatWest and Lloyds had little exposure through credit lines. One banker said that his bank's credit line had not been used for some time.

However, BCCI was active in the money markets and the foreign exchange market, and some foreign exchange trades were last night expected to fall as a result of the closure.

Banks had become more cautious about how much business they would do, but BCCI was still pretty active. It will be surprising if there are not failed trades, one bank treasurer said.

Payments on Far Eastern or European transactions would probably have been settled by the time BCCI was frozen, at 1pm BST, but there could be failed trades in dollar-denominated transactions, he added.

BANK OF ENGLAND STEPS IN

Co-ordinated swoop across 7 countries

By David Lasscelles, Banking Editor

YESTERDAY'S descent on BCCI by banking supervisors was an unprecedented display of co-ordinated action by the authorities.

The simultaneous swoop in seven countries came only minutes after the Bank of England had obtained a provisional winding-up order on BCCI in the UK courts.

At the same time, more than 50 other countries where BCCI has smaller operations were notified, with the expectation that they would take whatever local action was appropriate.

Only minor branches of the BCCI empire were allowed to continue in business - such as Hong Kong, which is considered separate from the main group.

The investigation was prompted by evidence of suspected fraud, which came to the notice of Price Waterhouse, the auditors, preparing the bank's 1990 accounts at the beginning of this year.

It was passed to the Bank of England, which commissioned Pw to write a full report. That was completed only last week. There was thus some satisfaction at the speed with which it had acted.

The question that is certain to be asked is why the authorities did not act sooner.

BCCI has been a highly controversial bank for more than a decade, and last year's Florida drugs-money laundering case was only the latest of many scandals that have hit the group.

However, Mr. Leigh-Pemberton, governor of the Bank of England, said yesterday that the bank had not had hard evidence of fraud to justify action in the UK until it received last week's report from Price Waterhouse.

"We have been keeping an eye on the bank for some time, and we have been well aware of the rumours going on about it."

However, we had no clear evidence under which we could act until this year," the governor said.

The Bank even drew comfort from last year's restructuring of BCCI, including the removal of the bank's London operation, and the bank's transfer of its headquarters to the Gulf.

The governor said yesterday that BCCI's shareholders had "a good record of support for this bank."

Normally, a bank would have a clear country of operation and would be looked after by the local supervisor rather than taking break action to deal with any problems.

The situation was described as "amorphous" by the governor and one that had plagued the authorities for years.

BCCI's unique structure, with its headquarters in Abu Dhabi, its registrations in Luxembourg and its main operations scattered around the globe, enabled it to evade close supervision.

Although BCCI's long money connections had hit the headlines, it does not look as if yesterday's move was linked to that, or to the fact that General Noriega of Panama kept accounts at BCCI's branch in the Edgware Road in London.

Judging by Mr. Leigh-Pemberton's comments, BCCI had managed to lose substantial sums of money on both its lending operations and its dealings in the money markets.

The bank then tried to conceal those losses with false accounting and other deceptive tricks over a long period, pointing to a wide-ranging fraud.

"The bank had not been successful for some years in both its lending and treasury operations," he said. "But the extent of the operations had been concealed."

The deception was carried out at the highest level within the bank, the governor said, and it was not until last week that local staff in the UK knew what was going on. He declined to identify any of the bank officials suspected, saying this was a matter for the Serious Fraud Office, which is now conducting an investigation.

The demise of BCCI will be greeted with widespread relief in the banking world. The bank's secretiveness, its links with crime and unpredictable behaviour made it a constant source of risk and embarrassment to the rest of the banking industry.

For many bankers it was a surprise that it had existed so long.

Very few banks had close dealings with it, and few knowledgeable bankers would have permitted their banks to develop any large exposure to it.

PROFILE: AGHA HASAN ABEDI

Mystic comes to end of the eternal bridge

By Richard Donkin

LUCKNOW-BORN Agha Hasan Abedi, BCCI's 68-year-old founder, is something of a poet and mystic as well as a banker.

In one of his poems published in the bank's 1984 annual report, he wrote: "We travel with the ever-changing procession of change. We travel on the eternal bridge of change. Above all, the instinct of the BCCI moves with the instinct of change."

That was the hallmark of BCCI which, right up to yesterday's raids, had existed in a state of flux. Mr. Abedi had left the bank to return to his roots in Pakistan where he planned to start a new bank, already dubbed "The son of BCCI".

His first banking empire, United Bank of Pakistan, was nationalised by president Zulfikar Ali Bhutto in 1972. By then, though, Mr. Abedi had built up a large enough coterie of Arab backers to take his ambitions on to a world stage with BCCI.

He also took with him a generation of disaffected Pakistani bankers to run the bank for him.

He is a man who commands great loyalty and admiration from those around him, a man who has always been rich and the powerful. Among his UK acquaintances was Lord Callaghan, the former prime minister. Perhaps the best-known western leader to have been captured by the Abedi charm was former US President Jimmy Carter.

In the past three years he was rarely seen in the bank. Staff said he was too sick to work after undergoing a heart transplant operation in 1988.

The reality was that he retained an influential role in the bank up to March last year when the sale of a BCCI holding gave control of the bank to Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al-Nahyan. He resigned as president of BCCI in October last year. His dream of a "Third World bank" that would bridge the gap between western wealth and Third World poverty had been ruined.

THE ABU DHABI CONNECTION

Ill-starred attempt to avoid embarrassment

By Victor Mallet, Middle East Correspondent

IT IS not easy to see why a BCCI subsidiary had pleaded guilty to drug-money laundering charges in the US.

All Sheikh Zayed will get for his pains is a visit from the British ambassador to Abu Dhabi, who will politely seek the ruler's co-operation in winding up the bank's affairs.

The finances of the Gulf's ruling families are frequently indistinguishable from those of the states, over which they preside, but this was not simply a case of a Gulf oil sheikh with more money than sense.

Abu Dhabi's decision to take a firm grip on BCCI was a belated and ill-fated attempt by Sheikh Zayed and his advisers to avoid the embarrassment that has now arrived in double measure.

They co-operated in recent months with the Federal Reserve's investigations into BCCI's US operations and into First American Bankshares (in which Sheikh Zayed and BCCI had stakes), and they formulated plans for rationalising BCCI's worldwide network.

The Abu Dhabi ruling family was involved in the bank from the start, taking a stake in it alongside the secretive Abu Dhabi Investment Authority and apparently using BCCI for its own banking needs.

Mr. Agha Hassan Abedi, BCCI's founder, had gone out of his way to cultivate influential figures in the Middle East and around the world.

Even before the operational headquarters were moved to Abu Dhabi from London, BCCI was in many ways a Middle Eastern bank, providing remittance services for the hundreds of thousands of Asian migrant workers in the Gulf.

When BCCI was first tainted with scandal, Sheikh Zayed may have felt that the choice lay between abandoning the bank and cleaning it up, because regulatory authorities in other countries were clearly beginning to lose patience and seemed keen to hold responsible Mr. Abedi.

As Mr. Jean-Nicholas Saba of the Luxembourg Monetary Institute said last year: "When they go to Abu Dhabi, certainly the authorities will take care of this bank." Abu Dhabi had the money but not, it now is clear, the regulatory framework to do the job.

EMPLOYEES ALSO VICTIMS

News leaves building deserted and staff bitter

By Neil Buckley

SHOCKED and bitter employees drifted out of BCCI's head office in London's Leadenhall Street yesterday carrying their personal possessions.

By mid-afternoon, the building was almost deserted. In the basement, the printing presses were silent as unattended printers spewed out reams of paper.

Karen Morgan, a secretary, said her department heard of the suspension of the bank's activities via a message at the top of their VDU screens.

"First of all, everybody was really quiet. Then people started crying and shouting. Some people had all their money in the bank."

Karen, 30, of Hornchurch,

Essex, said most employees had accounts with BCCI, and those had been frozen along with the rest. She had just £50 in her account, but a friend had £900.

A few who managed to withdraw money before the cashiers were closed were asked to return it.

While some employees were told to return to work as normal on Monday, others gave their telephone numbers to their managers and were told to wait for further news. Most believed there would be no job to come back to.

An employee from the bank's trade finance department was processing a payment of £500,000 when transactions were suspended.

"I'm worried I won't get another job," he said.

"We've heard other banks won't even interview people who have worked here."

He had heard rumours that officials from the Bank of England had been in the building that morning.

"This place is built on rumours. Since I've been here it's been rumour after rumour. In the end you believe nothing until it happens."

"I blame the senior executives. I think this has been going on for years."

Leaving by the rear exit, another trade finance employee said: "We had known something like this might happen because of the way the company was run."

He had heard rumours only the day before that members of senior management had left the company.

Security guards at the front door said they had been told to tell customers simply that the bank was closed.

At BCCI's nearby Cannon Street branch, the heavy metal doors were locked and the electronic board that usually displays international exchange rates was dead. There was no sign of movement inside, and no explanation given of the sudden closure.

On the street outside, the owner of an import-export business said he had been arranging a transfer of $500,000 from Africa at 12.45pm.

When he came back after lunch at 2pm, the door was locked. A worried-looking official told him to come back in 15 minutes. He phoned the bank from a call-box, and was told to return at 3pm. By then, however, it was an empty shell.

Earlier, a man trying to cash a cheque sneaked in as an employee left, but was promptly escorted out.

"They didn't tell me what was happening," he said. "Now what the hell happens?"

Legacy of litigation and inquiries into affairs will run and run

By Martin Dickson in New York

THE SEIZURE of BCCI's remaining US operations brings down the curtain on one of the chief American banking scandals of the past decade - but it leaves a legacy of investigations and legal action into the bank's affairs that will carry on for a long time to come.

State banking departments in New York and California took control of BCCI's local agency offices yesterday as part of the concerted international action against the Luxembourg-based bank.

The move freezes the operations of the offices and allows state banking officials to ensure an orderly liquidation of their assets through payments to creditors. The New York bank's assets are estimated to total about $100m, while those in Los Angeles are put at about $126m.

The New York banking department said: "When a foreign bank is seized in that country, this kind of action is virtually mandated in New York. You can't take out the heart and leave the arms and legs behind."

The New York and Los Angeles operations are BCCI's last remaining direct US operations. It was forced to close a similar operation in Miami, Florida, when it pleaded guilty to money laundering there last year.

The New York and Los Angeles operations were due to close even before yesterday's international swoop. The US Federal Reserve Board, furious over disclosures that BCCI had secret control of the largest bank in Washington, DC - First American Bankshares - got BCCI to agree last March to cease all banking operations in the US.

At the same time, the Fed ordered BCCI to sell its stake in Credit & Commerce International Holdings, a Netherlands Antilles company through which BCCI held its shares in the Washington bank.

It was not clear yesterday how far those orders had been carried out. The Fed said yesterday's action against BCCI would not affect the operations of either First American Bankshares or Independence Bank, which were separately capitalised and would continue to conduct normal business. The Fed noted that it had had supervisory orders in place for some time, prohibiting transactions between those banks and BCCI.

However, investigations are expected to continue by the Fed and the US Justice Department into the circumstances surrounding BCCI's acquisition of its stake in First American Bankshares. First American has assets of $11bn and owns banks in New York, Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee, Georgia and Florida as well as in Washington, DC.

The seriousness of the affair is underlined by the fact that estimates of the stake held by BCCI vary widely, from 25 to 50 per cent. The size of the holding may, in effect, have made BCCI a US bank holding company - even though it never received Fed permission to assume such a status.

Particular attention focuses on the role played by Mr. Clark Clifford, one of Washington's most eminent lawyers and political fixers, who has been a confidant of US presidents since the Second World War. He and Mr. Robert Altman, a law partner, were hired in 1979 by a group of Arab investors seeking to buy the predecessor bank to First American - Financial General Bankshares.

The Arab investors acquired the bank, Mr. Clifford was installed as chairman and Mr. Altman as president. The Arab investors subsequently used loans from BCCI to acquire the bank and at some point some of those loans became non-performing. Since the credits were secured by the First American stock, the shares in the bank fell to BCCI.

The question facing investigators is at what stage BCCI decided to take control of a US banking chain. Mr. Clifford and Mr. Altman were also counsel in the US to BCCI until last year. Mr. Altman helped to defend BCCI officers at the Florida money-laundering trial.

Both men have denied any knowledge of the BCCI stake in the bank. Meanwhile, investigations are continuing into numerous other aspects of BCCI's US activities. The Manhattan district attorney is investigating money-laundering allegations, while the House Banking Committee says it has evidence of fund transfers between BCCI and the Atlanta branch of Banca Nazionale del Lavoro (BNL) - the bank involved in the Iraqi loans scandal.

In Florida a federal judge last month held the bank's Cayman Islands unit in contempt, and ordered it fined $50,000 a day for failing to produce subpoenaed documents. A district judge in Miami has also ordered the bank to produce documents in a case brought by Lloyd's of London against BCCI and a Jordanian-born coffee merchant, involving accusations including insurance fraud.

While the bank may be dead, the scandals surrounding it still have plenty of life left in them.

The Financial Times (Europe) Ltd.
Published by The Financial Times
(Europe) Ltd., Frankfurt branch,
Grafenstrasse 54, 6000 Frankfurt, F.R.G.
Main 11: Telephone: 069-72557; Fax:
069-72557; Telex: 416193 represented by Richard Lamb, Frankfurt branch,
108 Rue de Rivoli, 75004 Paris Cedex
01, Tel: (01) 4297 0021; Fax: (01) 4297
0020. Editor: Richard Lamb. Publisher:
SA Nord Edit, 15/21 Rue de Cassini, 59100 Roubaix Cedex 1, FRANCE ISSN
1148-2733. Commission Paritaire No
6780/82.

Financial Times (Switzerland) Verlag
AG, 42A, DK-1161 Copenhagen N,
Denmark. Telephone: (33) 15 44 41. Fax:
(33) 355335.

كندا من اجل

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Unexpected fall in US employment

By Michael Proulx in Washington

US employment fell unexpectedly in June, the Labour Department reported yesterday. But the decline was not sufficient to reverse widespread confidence that a weak US economic recovery is under way.

Non-farm employment fell 50,000 to 108.8m, boosting the unemployment rate to 7 per cent, the highest in five years. This compares with 6.9 per cent in May and 5.3 per cent in June last year. Financial markets had been expecting an increase in jobs of about 50,000.

Yesterday's report, however, was encouraging in parts. May figures were revised to show an employment increase of 119,000 - more than double the original estimate. In June, the length of the average work week and overtime hours both increased for the second month running, strongly suggesting that the economy is continuing to strengthen.

Mr Janet Norwood, the head of the Bureau of Labour Statistics, said the June report indicated that "the labour market had stopped deteriorating". Employment had levelled off following big declines earlier in the year.

Jobs data are often volatile in the early stages of economic recovery. Employment declined in some of the early months of recovery following both the 1973-75 and 1981-82 recessions.

However, yesterday's figures, following a report of a fall in new homes sales in May, may renew doubts about the likely pace of economic recovery. Some analysts argue that the May upturn partly reflected distortions caused by unusually hot weather.

The consensus view is that real gross national output will grow languidly - at an annual rate of 2-3 per cent in coming quarters, or less than half the rate of expansion in typical post-war recoveries.

Employment in goods-producing industries fell 71,000 to 33.7m last month. Most of the decline was in manufacturing, where employment fell to its lowest level since the recession began last July. But service-sector employment rose modestly, partly because of the continuing buoyancy of the health care industry.

US wants backing for growth strategy

By Peter Riddell, US Editor, in Washington

THE US will seek international support for a comprehensive strategy to reform its economy, the summit of the heads of government of the Group of Seven countries in London in 10 days' time.

Mr Nicholas Brady, treasury secretary, first raised this issue 2 1/2 months ago at the spring meeting of the International Monetary Fund, when it was widely expected that a US approach to lower interest rates and led to a clash with Germany.

But the US is now presenting its call for lower real interest rates (adjusted for inflation) as part of a wider strategy of what Mr Brady prefers to call "low inflationary rather than non-inflationary growth".

Senior US officials, including Mr David Mervin, under-secretary for international affairs, will seek to produce a draft summit communiqué along these lines at a meeting of the sherpas, or leaders' personal representatives, this weekend.

In an interview in yesterday's New York Times, Mr Brady outlined his thinking on a three-pronged strategy to boost growth and assist economic reform in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

He talked of the need for a more dynamic monetary policy aimed at bringing down real interest rates, an international trade policy focused on the successful completion of the current Uruguay Round talks and on opening markets; and the elimination of structural rigidities hampering job creation and productivity growth.

Mr Brady believes other western governments are now coming round to accepting his views on the need for a growth-oriented strategy, as shown, for example, by this week's reduction in Japanese interest rates.

Japanese securities firms face tax bill

By Robert Thomson in Tokyo

JAPAN'S four leading securities houses were ordered yesterday to pay an extra ¥9bn ($40m) in taxes and were told by the Ministry of Finance that they would no longer be allowed to run special discretionary accounts for favoured corporate clients.

Two local governments, Kobe and Osaka, also registered their disgust at the leading brokers' compensation of favoured clients and their links to gangster groups by announcing a suspension of dealings with the Big Four - Nomura Securities, Daiwa Securities, Nikko Securities, and Yamachi Securities.

The Tokyo Regional Taxation Bureau calculated that ¥9bn was due from the brokers because they failed to declare a total of ¥20bn in loss reimbursements made in the 2 1/2 years to March 1990.

Bureau officials said the ¥20bn should have been reported as "social expenses", as it was money spent to please clients.

Nomura was ordered to pay an additional ¥4,000m, Daiwa ¥6,000m, Nikko ¥2,100m, and Yamachi ¥2,100m. Taxation officers are still investigating the extent of compensation by the brokers, which have been warned by the ministry that the practice must not be repeated.

Mr Hiroshi Yasuda, the vice-minister of finance, said that apart from banning the use of the discretionary accounts, known as "elgyo tokkin", the ministry would officially order the four brokers to overhaul their management structure and to impose penalties on managers responsible for the loss reimbursements.

The Kobe and Osaka governments, in the west of Japan, said they would suspend indefinitely their use of the four securities houses, and rely on smaller brokers for fund management.

Kobe said the funds managed for it by the quarter last year totalled ¥140bn, while Osaka did not specify a figure.

Kobe officials said the four brokers "deserve punishment from society". The Kobe area has been the traditional home of Japan's largest gangster group, Yamaguchi-gumi, and the local government was angered by the news that affiliates of Nomura and Nikko had provided funds to gangsters.

Cyril Ramaphosa elected secretary-general of the African National Congress

By Paul Waldmeir in Durban

MR Cyril Ramaphosa, who was yesterday elected secretary-general of the African National Congress (ANC), knows when to fight and when to give in - and that makes him rare in the ranks of the ANC.

The soft-spoken 38-year-old, currently general secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers (NUM), is arguably the most able black politician in South Africa apart from Mr Nelson Mandela himself. Indeed, yesterday's election clearly identifies Mr Ramaphosa as a potential successor to the ANC president.

He has spent the past decade learning the skills of negotiation across the table from representatives of the mine employers. While many of his ANC colleagues were locked in the politics of struggle, Mr Ramaphosa was learning how to compromise from a position of strength.

His election demonstrates the ANC's desire to proceed urgently to talks on a post-apartheid constitution - as well as its dissatisfaction with the progress of negotiations so far. ANC leaders admit they have often let the initiative pass to their opponents, the Pretoria government; they hope Mr Ramaphosa, with his reputation for shrewdness and pragmatism, will put them back on the offensive.

Mr Ramaphosa's election ends a year-long period which he has spent in political exile, fighting the battles of miners' close to agreement on a performance-related deal for the entire industry. When the ANC was legalised 17 months ago, they were largely left out of its leadership.

But the NUM leader appears to have been singled out for special chastisement: tension arose between him and Mr Mandela, who was elected ANC president yesterday, over the issue of Mr Winnie Mandela. In 1989, Mr Ramaphosa publicly protested against the behaviour of Mrs Mandela, who was recently convicted on four counts of kidnapping and being an accessory to assault. He has been paying the price ever since, though yesterday's election demonstrates his obvious popularity among ANC and union members.

Praise for Mr Ramaphosa comes not only from his obvious constituency - the miners, who have acquired a measure of dignity and control over their working lives as a result of the NUM's efforts - but from whites in business and government.

Corporate executives who show nothing but disdain for most ANC leaders admit the highest respect for Mr Ramaphosa, even though he is a socialist. (He is not openly a member of the South African Communist party, though many ANC leaders choose not to reveal this affiliation). White local government officials in Johannesburg, who have encountered him as a Soweto community leader, seem to hold the NUM leader in a sort of awe. Everyone comments on his charm, his toughness, and the obvious inner strength and exquisite politeness which he shares with Mr Mandela.

As a leading member of the Soweto People's Delegation, he helped negotiate an agreement to bring together black and white local authorities in the Johannesburg area into the so-called Central Witwatersrand Metropolitan Chamber, where a future non-racial local authority for Johannesburg is to be negotiated.

The agreement opened Mr Ramaphosa to attack from other leading anti-apartheid activists, who reject it because it includes black local councillors, restricted for their collaboration with the Pretoria government which they represent. But the chamber has already won big benefits for Sowetans.

The Soweto deal demonstrates Mr Ramaphosa's pragmatism, as does the recent profit-related pay deal agreed at East Rand Goldfields. The NUM and the Chamber of Mines are understood to be close to agreement on a performance-related deal for the entire industry. An important concession which may prove a precedent for future deals. Mr

Ramaphosa: reputation for shrewdness and pragmatism

Duncan Innes, a labour relations consultant, sums up his attitude this way: "If the other side is flexible, Cyril will not waste the opportunity."

At least as important, Mr Ramaphosa has a rapport with ordinary people which the patriarchs of the top ANC leadership lack. He lives in a flat at Jabulani, one of the most depressed Soweto suburbs; though he is a lawyer with no underground experience in the mines, he is widely popular in his own union. Mr Innes cites the recent summit on the future of the gold industry - which brought together unions, employers and government at the urging of Mr Ramaphosa - to argue that the new secretary-general is a man of "stature and vision". The ANC could hardly have elected a better man.

Japan plans budget spending rise of 5%

By Emiko Terazono in Tokyo

THE Japanese government is planning a 5.2 per cent rise in spending for next year's budget to ¥38,956.5bn (£17.9bn) including significant increases in official development aid (ODA), defence, public works, and pension-related spending.

A preliminary report of the expenditure budget for the year to March 1993 was approved by the cabinet yesterday. The proposals, which will be negotiated in coming months between the ministries involved, provided guidelines for fiscal spending which will be formally approved early next year.

ODA spending is planned to rise 9.8 per cent, after debates between the Finance Ministry and Foreign Ministry.

The Foreign Ministry had been demanding a double-digit increase, to achieve a ¥50bn target in aid to developing countries.

The Finance Ministry, which had been urging that the quality rather than the quantity of aid be improved, agreed to a substantial increase ahead of the summit meetings.

Growth in defence spending is planned to be kept at a 30-year low of 5.38 per cent, thanks to the easing of international tensions.

Public works and other investment spending, targeted in bilateral trade talks with the US, are scheduled for a 6.1 per cent increase.

A special ¥200bn allocation for public works, intended to help realise Japan's pledge to increase public investment over the next 10 years, was also set.

Current account surplus for May more than tripled

By Robert Thomson in Tokyo

JAPAN'S current account surplus in May more than tripled from a year earlier to ¥4,270bn (£2,660bn), prompting concern in Tokyo that trade friction with the EC and US will intensify in coming months.

The Ministry of Finance said exports rose 12.2 per cent from a year earlier and imports fell 1.5 per cent, contributing to a current account surplus for the first five months of ¥22.3bn, up 42.4 per cent on the same period last year. Seasonally adjusted, the surplus for the month was ¥5,880bn, down from ¥7,780bn in April. The ministry reported that the overall balance of payments, seasonally adjusted, showed a surplus of ¥6,450bn, compared to a ¥773m deficit in April.

Finance Ministry officials have argued that "special factors", such as currency fluctuations and unusually low raw materials prices, were responsible for the rapidly expanding current account surplus. But there are now widespread fears that economic upturn in the US will lead to a higher surplus in coming months.

The ministry said Japanese investors sharply increased net purchases of foreign bonds during May to ¥10,010bn, from ¥2,300bn in April. This was the first month the ¥10bn barrier has been passed since December 1989, when the Tokyo stock market reached its peak.

Net purchases of foreign stocks were ¥993m, down from ¥1,370bn in April, while foreign net purchases of Japanese bonds were ¥2,160bn, up from ¥1,710bn, and net purchases of Japanese stocks were ¥437m, compared to ¥738m.

Condominium sales in Tokyo for the first half of this year fell 35.1 per cent from a year earlier to a record low of 11,197 units, the Real Estate Economic Institute reported yesterday.

The fall highlights the instability in the property market, as the sales figure was lower than the record half-year low of 11,300 units in 1976, when the Japanese economy was suffering from the oil shock.

The ratio of condominiums contracted to be sold at the time of construction fell from 85.7 per cent in the same period last year to 56.8 per cent.

Clash over HK stock exchange

HONG KONG'S stock exchange and the Securities and Futures Commission, the colony's regulatory watchdog, moved closer to confrontation yesterday after the exchange refused to reform its governing council, writes Angus Foster in Hong Kong.

If the controversy is not solved quickly it could further undermine the status of the exchange, which has still not cast off doubts about its claim to be an international market following a four-day closure in the 1987 global crash.

The main aim of the reform package backed by the SFC and the government is to reduce the control of a small group of Chinese brokers by widening the membership of the exchange's governing council. The group has the support of many exchange members who are now inactive or trade infrequently.

The SFC has warned that, unless the reforms are introduced voluntarily, harder-hitting ones will be forced on the exchange using Hong Kong's securities rules. The SFC says there are "two to three weeks" left before it starts statutory proceedings to make the changes in time for the exchange's annual general meeting in December.

The package was voted down

A trader at the Hong Kong Stock Exchange yells a bid yesterday. The exchange rose 42 points to 3892.71 on news that the colony's new airport would go ahead yesterday by 10 votes to 9, with one abstention and two absences. Some observers suspect the exchange is stalling to push for a softer reform package, although the SFC says it will make no more concessions.

The SFC is trying to avoid a clash because it has been accused of heavy-handed actions against small local brokers in favour of international houses.

India averts default on debts

By K. K. Sharma in New Delhi

INDIA has avoided defaulting on its international obligations, according to Dr Manmohan Singh, minister of finance.

He said yesterday that "firm action on the part of the government had averted... default".

The minister did not give any details on what arrangements had been made to repay foreign debt worth $600m (£375m) falling due in the next few weeks, but it is apparent that the government has received positive signals from the International Monetary Fund on further loans.

After a reassuring statement by the IMF on Thursday, talks started yesterday in New Delhi between an IMF team and Indian officials on further assistance. India has already drawn $1.6bn this year, including $1bn from the compensatory financing facility, and is seeking an additional long-term $500-600m loan.

Dr Singh also spoke of "bold and rational measures", including big structural reforms, that the government would take to ensure that "India is not marginalised in the world".

Some, including devaluation of the rupee, deregulation of trade and a rise in interest rates, were announced earlier this week.

The next steps include a budget that will sharply reduce the fiscal deficit and a new industrial policy to ease restrictions on foreign investment.

Poland misses interest payment

By Richard Waters

POLAND this week missed a $100m (£62.5m) interest payment to its foreign bank creditors, the first payment due since the latest round of talks began on rescheduling its medium-term debt in late 1989.

Senior Finance Ministry officials said the payment had been delayed for technical reasons and would be made early next week. However, bank creditors remained concerned about Poland's commitment to make the overdue interest payment, which had been due last Monday.

Failure to make the payment could lead to a break-down in rescheduling talks, which until now had appeared to be proceeding smoothly.

The country's 500 bank creditors had indicated that they were prepared to proceed with a debt reduction package provided agreement was reached on $1.5bn of overdue interest. Mr Jeff Stokley of Barclays Bank, which chairs the creditors' committee, said Poland had agreed to pay $100m of this unconditionally.

Gorbachev gives warm welcome to German chancellor

SOVIET President Mikhail Gorbachev warmly welcomed German Chancellor Helmut Kohl in Kiev yesterday where the two heads of state met to discuss the Soviet Union's quest for assistance from the west, reports Chrystia Freeland in Kiev.

After two hours of talks, Mr Gorbachev and Mr Kohl went for a brief walk in the park at Mezhyhorya.

Mr Gorbachev requested the meeting as part of a campaign to win western financial support. He is due to press his case to the heads of the seven leading industrialised nations at a G7 summit which begins on July 15. However, the Soviet leader has been warned not to count on substantial aid from the leaders.

Without significant western help, the Soviet Union contends that it will be impossible to implement the market and privatisation reforms prescribed as the only cure for the USSR's economy.

The Kiev meeting was not expected to test Mr Gorbachev's powers of persuasion. Germany, eager to negotiate a rapid withdrawal of Soviet forces from its eastern border and with a strong geographical interest in political stability in the USSR, has acted as the Kremlin's advocate, urging more reluctant countries to assist the Soviet Union.

Mr Kohl, whose treasury is already feeling the pinch of reforming one socialist economy, is unlikely unilaterally to pledge support, and is expected to do some pleading of his own with Mr Gorbachev.

The chancellor was expected to outline the steps Mr Gorbachev needed to take to secure Western financial aid.

Political stability in the USSR:

- Assurances that the Soviet leadership, which has a history of announcing and then renouncing or ignoring ambitious economic reform programmes, was committed to its plan and capable of carrying it out.
- Proof that the Kremlin was in control of the Soviet Union.
- Clearing the third hurdle poses particular difficulties for Mr Gorbachev, as the Ukrainian venue of the meeting made clear. Last week, the Ukrainian parliament postponed discussion of the Union Treaty until September, thus fulfilling Mr Gorbachev's plan to have the document signed in time for the G7 summit.

Moreover, there is every indication that, come autumn, Ukrainian parliamentarians will reject the current version of the Union Treaty, demanding instead an arrangement which denies the central government powers of direct taxation, gives the Ukraine complete control over its economy, including the right to establish a separate currency, an independent foreign policy and an internal army.

The Ukraine's increasingly vocal insistence on economic independence also calls into question the Kremlin's ability to implement an economic reform package.

Mr Vitold Fokin, the Ukrainian prime minister, yesterday sent a hostile letter to Mr Valentin Pavlov, Soviet prime minister, rejecting the latter's alliance privatisation plan.

The letter argued that "according to the legislation of the Ukraine, the de-nationalisation and privatisation of all enterprises and organisations on the territory of the republic exclusively come under the competence of the state authorities of the Ukraine."

Opposition groups held protests in what is officially called "October Revolution Square" in central Kiev but has been popularly renamed "Independence Square".

Some 3,000 nationalists gathered in Kiev's main square to hear speeches saying Mr Gorbachev did not represent the Ukraine and to wave banners in Russian, Ukrainian, German and English.

Safely ensconced in the 10th century monastery 30km outside Kiev, Mr Kohl and Mr Gorbachev were unlikely to hear the crowd or meet opposition parliamentarians who delivered a letter of protest to the German consulate in Kiev.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Bundesrat elects to stay behind in Bonn

BONN, which lost out to Berlin as united Germany's seat of government, was handed the consolation prize yesterday when the upper house of parliament voted to stay there for the time being, Reuter reports from Bonn.

The Bundesrat - representatives of Germany's 16 states - voted 38-30 in favour of remaining in the quiet Rhineland town.

The lower house, or Bundestag, voted on June 20 to move itself and the government to Berlin by the end of the century.

Kashmir PM arrested

The government of Pakistan-held Kashmir yesterday dismissed its prime minister and arrested him, the state-run news agency said, Reuter reports from Islamabad. Kashmir President Sardar Abdul Qayyum said Mr Mumtaz Rathore's outburst since his party's overwhelming defeat in legislative elections last week could damage Pakistan's stand on the issue of divided Kashmir.

Brussels probes CD claims

The European Commission said yesterday it was investigating charges by EC producers that anti-dumping duties imposed last year on Japanese and South Korean compact disc players had been absorbed by the exporters. Reuter reports from Brussels.

Sweden weighs EC costs

Sweden is expected to contribute SKr14.6bn (£1.4bn) at current prices to the annual European Community budget, according to a government paper on the effects of Swedish membership, published yesterday, John Burton writes from Stockholm.

The document, presented four days after Sweden formally applied for EC membership, said Sweden would be a net contributor to the EC budget, but would receive some support from the EC's agricultural and regional development funds.

$6bn US order for Airbus

Airbus Industrie, the European aircraft consortium, yesterday announced orders for up to 75 wide-bodied A300-600 freighter aircraft worth about $6bn from Federal Express, the US cargo carrier, Paul Bettis, Aerospace Correspondent, writes.

Manila cabinet chief resigns

Mr Oscar Ordoñez, Philippines' cabinet chief, resigned yesterday after differences between Mr Ordoñez and Mr Jesus Estanislao, the finance secretary, over the country's IMF economic stabilisation programme, Greg Hutchinson reports from Manila.

Lebanese army advances

The Lebanese army occupied the last PLO guerrilla positions in south Lebanon yesterday, advancing to the edge of Palestinian refugee camps and ending 30 years of PLO gun-rule in the area, Reuter reports from Beirut.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Germany predicts fall in government borrowing needs

By Quentin Peel in Bonn

THE German government's borrowing requirement, above all to finance spending in the regions of the former East Germany, will fall next year to just DM550bn ($175bn) compared with DM664bn this year, thanks to the current battery of tax increases, the Finance Ministry forecast yesterday.

Thereafter, the steady reduction in state subsidies in all sectors, and the increase in value added tax from 1993, should reduce the borrowing requirement to DM255bn by 1995. That is the central and relatively optimistic forecast submitted by Mr Theo Waigel, finance minister, to the cabinet yesterday.

The total budget for 1992 for the unified Germany is put at DM422.4bn, an increase of 3 per cent on the combined spending this year. Of that, the former East German territories will get DM109bn, compared with DM95bn this year.

The draft budget was submitted to the cabinet yesterday as the latest German trade figures showed that the surge in imports to supply the east, and the relative stagnation of exports, led to a further deterioration in the current account for May.

Visible trade was in deficit for the second month running, with an import surplus of DM900m, compared with DM1.4bn in April. Although visible imports increased only 0.3 per cent over April, to DM55.4bn, they are up 19 per cent compared with May 1990, when they totalled DM46.7bn. In contrast, exports were down 7.4 per cent over the year, from DM59bn to DM54.7bn.

The deficit on the current account (including transfers and services) worsened sharply, according to preliminary Bundesbank estimates, from DM2.6bn in April to DM4bn in May. From January to May, the visible trade was still slightly in surplus, but the current account deficit totalled DM15.9bn.

Mr Waigel's rather more optimistic budget forecast is based on an assumption that the progressive dismantling of state subsidies of some DM10bn per annum, as demanded by Mr Jürgen Möllemann, economics minister, will be approved by the cabinet next week.

Brittan rebuffs car makers on subsidies

By Andrew Hill in Brussels

SIR LEON BRITAN, the EC competition commissioner, yesterday struck back at EC car manufacturers' calls for special protection from Renault, arguing that the Commission should "give no ground at all to powerful interest groups when it comes to certain fundamental principles".

Speaking to a Westminster audience, he said the pressure for aid was building up from all sectors of European industry as the single market came closer, but the car industry in particular was "crying out for special treatment".

His speech follows last month's plea from Asea, representing 15 European vehicle groups, for financial help as the industry prepares for competition with Japanese producers.

Sir Leon repeated three fundamental principles which had to be upheld:

- "A free market in Europe, by European workers, for European goods."
- "Rapid transition to a fully open market" is the EC's goal.
- The Community should remain "level-headed" when threatened with the possibility of heavy job losses.

EC pursues delicate balancing act of support for Yugoslavia

By David Buchan and Ronald van de Krol in The Hague

EC FOREIGN ministers meeting in The Hague yesterday made it clear that the Community was "not on the side of Belgrade, but of Yugoslavia" in the words of Mr Hans van den Broek, the Netherlands foreign minister.

It was a delicate balancing act. Mr van den Broek spelled out that "in asking for a suspension of the implementation of the declarations (by Slovenia and Croatia) of independence, the EC means a return to the position of June 25". Only after that date did Slovenia parliament forces start to enforce the independence declaration by displacing federal police and customs officers along the republic's borders.

Hans van den Broek, not on the side of Belgrade

Mr van den Broek, who as president of the EC Council of Ministers will lead the three-day mission in a week to Yugoslavia, gave two reasons why the Community was pursuing its policy of supporting Yugoslavia, and not any one side in the conflict.

First, the EC was urging the federal president - whose head, Mr Stipe Mesic, was able to assume office last week after EC intervention - to exert full "political and constitutional control over the Yugoslav People's Army".

Second, while much of the federal governments' ultimatum to Slovenia was "in line with the EC proposals", Mr van den Broek said, "without any doubt, the deadlines (in Belgrade's ultimatum) will have to be extended."

The moves to suspend Bosnia (2500m) of outstanding EC financial aid to Yugoslavia, to cut off all arms sales to Belgrade and the republics and to appeal to other states to do the same, won quick approval from the EC.

In contrast, deep divisions were revealed over whether, and how, to brandish the weapon of diplomatic recognition of Slovenia and Croatia over Belgrade's head. Mr Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the German foreign minister, said he would have liked a clear reference to the diplomatic threat in yesterday's EC communiqué, and would push hard for it once more, if the Yugoslav army started shooting again.

Virtually all other states were more exercised about the consequences elsewhere in eastern Europe of seeming to back secession in Yugoslavia. Denmark alone appears to champion both Balkan and Baltic self-determination.

Leading the opposition to early recognition was Mr Roland Dumas, the French foreign minister, who warned of the need to avoid Yugoslav republics becoming "too openly under foreign influence".

He had therefore had Austria in mind.

CSCE crisis-management mechanism scrapes through

EUROPE's new emergency crisis-management mechanism barely passed its first test, early yesterday morning, at a meeting of senior officials from 35 countries that frequently threatened to descend into pure farce.

Much of the 16 hours of talks during the second day of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe meeting, which ended just before 8am on Friday, was spent waiting for the phone to ring from Belgrade. It was there that the federal and military Yugoslav authorities were trying to agree on a reply to the CSCE offers to send "good offices" and observer missions to Yugoslavia.

As a result of the Yugoslav's sensitivity about the precarious military and political situation in their country, several of the CSCE's original proposals were rejected by Belgrade. The word "observer" was finally dropped from the text backing the European Community's intention to organise a mission to Yugoslavia.

It was nevertheless made clear that such a mission would be sent "to help stabilise a cease-fire" and to monitor the return of troops to their barracks. The CSCE's other offer, to send a "good offices" mission to facilitate a political dialogue among the parties concerned in Yugoslavia, was short of one of its essential elements as the result of Yugo-slav objections.

The federal authorities refused to accept a phrase which said one of the tasks of the "good offices" mission would be "the establishment of a new constitutional order" in Yugoslavia. The implied threat to the military state was clearly too much for the federal and

Robert Mauthner reports on the long wait that marked the first test of Europe's new emergency response system military authorities in Belgrade to swallow at this delicate juncture in their relations with the two breakaway republics of Slovenia and Croatia.

The Soviet Union, though adopting a generally constructive attitude, also found it difficult to endorse a text permitting an international "good offices" mission to intervene in the internal political disputes of a member nation.

It finally did so. But with an eye on its own troubles with the Baltic and other Soviet republics, Moscow insisted on making a unilateral declaration that such a procedure should not be considered a precedent. In other words, what may be all right for Yugoslavia, is not necessarily acceptable for the Soviet Union.

The talks underlined the shortcomings of the CSCE, which can be paralysed by the veto of a single member country. The rule that all decisions must be taken by consensus and that the 1975 Helsinki agreement, which forbids intervention in the internal affairs of member states can be invoked at any time, have been shown to be serious obstacles to effective decision-making and the adoption of practical measures.

The final text on the "good offices" mission still left doubt about its acceptability to Yugoslavia. "If and when accepted by Yugoslavia", it said, though the Yugoslav delegate at the meeting had apparently signalled his oral approval after hours of telephone conversations with Belgrade.

However, the most significant indication of the relative impotence of the CSCE was the frank recognition in the final texts of the European Community's leading role as a mediator in the Yugoslav crisis.

The EC acted much more quickly and flexibly than the CSCE in sending its "troika" of foreign ministers to Yugoslavia after Slovenia and Croatia had declared themselves independent.

Moreover, its plan for defusing the crisis - acceptance of a cease-fire, return of troops to their barracks, restoration of constitutional rules for the rotation of the presidency and suspension for three months of the implementation of independence declarations - formed the basis of all the CSCE's proposals.

The CSCE can derive some satisfaction from the fact that its emergency crisis-management mechanism, adopted in Berlin amid much self-congratulation only two weeks ago, has at least functioned, if belatedly. But, to the extent that international mediation can help to solve Yugoslavia's internal crisis, it is the EC that will be at the sharp end.

UK NEWS

Fiat cuts prices as car war intensifies

By Kevin Done, Motor Industry Correspondent

FIAT, THE Italian car maker, yesterday joined the growing price war in the UK new car market with cuts ranging from £500 to £2,000 on selected models across its range.

Fiat is the fourth car maker to announce price cuts: Nissan UK, Ford and Vauxhall have already acted. The four marques together accounted for 47 per cent of the UK new car market in the first six months of the year.

Like Ford and Nissan UK, Fiat Auto (UK) has chosen to cut the list prices of selected models. Some Tempra saloons are to be reduced by £1,100, with cuts of £1,000 on some Tipo and Uno models, and up to £500 on versions of the Panda. The biggest cut - £2,000 - has been made on stocks of some old models of the Fiat Crona executive car.

The company's share of the British market has shrunk to only 2.1 per cent in the first six months, reflecting a 40.3 per cent drop in sales volume. The UK is one of the Italian car maker's weakest markets in Europe.

Fiat Auto (UK) said it was funding the price cuts itself and dealer margins would remain unchanged. Existing cheap-finance deals, including zero-rate finance for the cheapest versions of the Panda, Uno and Tipo models would also remain in place. While Ford, Nissan and Fiat have chosen to cut list prices of some models, Vauxhall has announced various marketing measures, including "cash-back" offers of up to £1,500 on selected models.

The car price war has developed in response to the continuing deep recession in the UK new car market, where total new car sales fell by 24.5 per cent in the first half of 1991 after a drop of 12.7 per cent in the whole of last year.

Car producers are seeking desperately to stimulate demand in the all-important month of August, which traditionally accounts for more than a fifth of all UK new car sales because the registration prefix changes.

Large discounts of between 10 per cent and 15 per cent have been increasingly available for negotiation with dealers by car buyers in recent months as the recession has deepened, and that margin for bargaining remains in the wake of the price cuts.

The amount of financial support offered to dealers by car makers in order to sell old stock had already led to offers whereby buyers of some Ford Granada or Sierra Cosworth models - at full price - could acquire a Fiesta free.

Lords refuse Guinness challenge

By Raymond Hughes, Law Courts Correspondent

MR ROGER SEELIG and Lord Spens, the two former merchant bankers who are defendants in the second trial arising out of the Guinness affair, have been refused leave by the Law Lords to challenge in the House of Lords a ruling they claim will stop them getting a fair trial.

As a result, the trial, which was originally scheduled to start last February but was repeatedly postponed, is likely to begin on September 23.

Mr Seelig is a former corporate finance director at Morgan Grenfell and Lord Spens a former director of corporate finance at Henry Ansbacher.

The two men are charged with conspiracy and false accounting in relation to the share support operation mounted by Guinness during its lengthy takeover battle for Distillers, the Scottish drinks group, during 1988.

Mr Seelig and Lord Spens challenged a ruling by Mr Justice Henry, the trial judge, that evidence they gave to inspectors from the Department of Trade and Industry could be used by the Serious Fraud Office at the trial.

They argued that the inspectors should have cautioned them against self-incrimina-

No access to the upper chamber: Roger Seelig, former Morgan Grenfell finance director tion, and that the failure to do so made it unfair for their evidence to be used at the trial.

The Court of Appeal rejected an appeal against the ruling but agreed that the issue raised questions of law of general public importance meriting the Law Lords' consideration.

Yesterday, however, the Law Lords' appeals committee, which is used to vet applications for leave to appeal, informed Mr Seelig and Lord Spens that their petitions for appeal against the ruling had been unsuccessful.

Tecs to strengthen liaison group

A MAJORITY of the 82 employer-led Training and Enterprise Councils (Tecs) have agreed to strengthen the liaison group of 10 Tec chairmen which liaises with Mr Michael Howard, the employment secretary, Lisa Wood writes.

The decision was made at a conference of Tec chairmen and chief executives in Birmingham this week, called to discuss the progress of Tecs and the prospects of improving skills in Britain.

Mr Eric Dancer, G10 chairman, said that a majority of Tecs had agreed that G10 would be put on a more formal basis with a small full-time secretariat. Only a small number of Tecs have said they will not participate and contribute towards the secretariat.

Mr Paul Fryer, chief executive of Humberside Tec, which opposed the move, said: "We have a contract with the secretary of state for employment and we want a direct route to him."

Recovery hope

THE economy may have reached the lowest point in the recession, according to a set of cyclical economic indicators published yesterday by the government.

The longer leading indicator rose in April to 96.6, from 97.4 in March, suggesting that activity may have bottomed and that a mild recovery can be expected soon.

Housing fall

CONSTRUCTION started in May on 13,700 new homes in Britain, a fall of 1,900 compared with May last year, according to provisional estimates. Completions were 14,300, compared with 14,700 in May last year.

Bank staff ballot

STAFF AT the Co-operative Bank are to be balloted on industrial action after talks yesterday at Asea, the conciliation service, failed to resolve a disagreement over a pay freeze.

Members of Bifu, the banking union, will be asked to support an overtime ban and a halt to replenishing automatic cash dispensers. The union wants a 5.5 per cent pay rise from last April 1, the anniversary of the last pay settlement.

The bank has indicated that it will consider a salary review from October 1.

Smoke alarm bill

A PRIVATE MEMBER'S bill requiring all new homes to be fitted with smoke detectors completed its passage through the Commons yesterday and now awaits Royal Assent.

THE BARLOW CLOWES TRIAL

'Unprecedented' shredding of documents alleged

By Raymond Hughes, Law Courts Correspondent

WHEN THE net began to close in on the Barlow Clowes fund management empire at the end of 1987, documents were shredded "on an unprecedented scale", the prosecution alleged yesterday.

Alan Suckling QC said Mr Peter Clowes had known that Department of Trade and Industry inspectors investigating his UK business were likely to find there were not enough gilt stocks to repay clients and that some holdings had been transferred offshore.

He had therefore had files doctored to remove traces of transfers offshore and stolen £16m of offshore clients' funds to plug gaps. He had also ordered bogus letters to be placed on files to say that accounts had been closed and clients repaid their investments, Mr Suckling alleged.

Mr Clowes, Mr Guy Cramer, Dr Peter Naylor and Mr Christopher Newman are accused of stealing £16.5m from investors in offshore funds. Mr Clowes, Dr Naylor and Mr Cramer are also jointly charged with conspiring to contravene section 191(1) of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act, which deals with false statements made to induce people to invest. Mr Clowes alone is accused of eight offences under the subsection. They deny all the charges.

Mr Suckling said there were bound to have been inquiries from tax and other advisers as to how the gilt investment scheme worked. Some Barlow Clowes employees inevitably queried transfers of funds from client accounts which did not seem to have anything to do with purchases of gilts.

"You might have expected any competent audit of the offshore funds to reveal if any gilts had been bought,"

He said Mr Clowes had fended off awkward inquiries by using a screen of dishonest stories and delaying tactics.

"He was helped by the reactions of those who stayed dangerously near to discovering the truth. There seems to have been a reluctance in some of them to believe that a fraud of this nature and scale could have been perpetrated.

"There seems to have been some concern not to affect the position of investors by rocking the boat unnecessarily.

"Some of his [Mr Clowes'] employees may have been concerned about losing their jobs, which were well paid.

"The vigilance or tenacity of the auditors at a later stage may be thought to have fallen below that which might have been expected of them," Mr Suckling said.

The trial continues on Monday.

THE BLUE ARROW TRIAL

Responsibility lay with County, court told

By John Mason

RESPONSIBILITY for any mistakes made over the 1987 Blue Arrow rights issue lay with County NatWest, not the former NatWest chairman, the court heard yesterday.

Lord Boardman, a prosecution witness, denied that any attempt had been made within NatWest to conceal anything or protect any one part of the group rather than another.

He was responding to a suggestion from Mr Jeremy Roberts QC, for Mr Jonathan Cohen, a former County chief executive, that at the top level of the parent bank there had been a desire to limit any damage from the affair to County NatWest, not the former NatWest chairman, the court heard yesterday.

He told the court: "I do not believe that other executives in NatWest were responsible for those events or mistakes, whatever they were." When, in late November, County gave him his first detailed account of the transaction, he was not told the facts as they were now known, he said.

Lord Boardman denied a suggestion from Mr Roberts that the trauma of the affair had caused him to develop a mental block that prevented his acknowledging that anyone in the parent bank had known anything that might leave them open to criticism.

County NatWest, NatWest Investment Bank, UBS Phillips & Drew and seven individuals deny conspiring to mislead the markets over the result of the £37m issue by secretly buying parcels of shares in the company.

Lord Boardman accepted that he had probably been told by NatWest's senior management in October of the split of shares taken by County and UBS. He told Mr Roy Amlot QC, for Mr Alan Kent, a solicitor who advised County, that he had not been told of the indemnity given to UBS against any losses.

Lord Boardman said he would have expected the senior NatWest management to give him all relevant information. "If they did not do so, I would have criticised them severely," he told Mr Anthony Hooper QC, for Mr David Bead, a former County director.

The trial continues on Tuesday.

Parties take lessons from Walton

By David Butler

THE WALTON by-election result says less about the next general election than any other recent by-election, but there are some lessons to be learnt.

Until Thursday, 4.5 per cent was an official Conservative candidate had ever won in Britain (at Bethnal Green in 1929). The 2.5 per cent won by Mr Berkeley Greenwood indicates that voters in once-Conservative Liverpool have learnt to vote tactically.

The Kinnochite triumph over militant (by a ratio of 8-1) in the hard left's staunchest territory must encourage Labour in its anxious quest for a solid middle-of-the-road image. It must also help in the regeneration of the city of Liverpool.

The 35 per cent of the poll captured by the Liberal Democrats confirms the party's skill in doing better than their

AVERAGE OF NATIONAL POLLS THIS YEAR
	Con %	Lab %	Lib.Dem %	Cons lead %
(Oct '90)	(84)	(47)	(14)	(+13)
Jan '91	45	42	10	+3
Feb	45	41	10	+4
Mar	43	39	15	+4
Apr	41	41	14	0
May	37	42	17	-5
June 1-15	35	44	17	-9
June 15	38	41	16	-3

opinion poll standing suggests.

Even so, for serious guidance as to the public's mood today at most 11 months from the next general election - we have to turn to the opinion polls.

Conservatives seized eagerly on their upsurge from last month in yesterday's Gallup poll (which still left them 3.5 per cent behind Labour) to dismiss their Liverpool humiliation.

The message of the polls is nevertheless confusing.

For six weeks in May and June, Labour appeared to have a winning lead, while its actual support fluctuated by only 3 per cent. Tory fortunes were more unstable.

It is easy to speculate that while the health service was in the headlines at the local elections and in the Monmouth by-election, the Conservatives were at a disadvantage, but that their counter-attack on the tax implications of Labour's public-expenditure promises had some impact. It is even possible that, in spite of the Heath-Thatcher conflict, the issue of Europe once again helps the Conservatives.

Additionally, the national focus on Liverpool and its internal difficulties during the Walton contest may have moved opinion towards the Conservatives.

The electorate is volatile. Many people appear ready to change their vote and events over the next nine months will alter their perceptions of the competence of the rival leaders and of the prospects for the economy.

The public plainly has no entrenched confidence in either side, leaving the politicians and their media men all to play for.

MIGRATE to USA
under the NEW Immigration law

Natives BORN in several European countries, including Great Britain, N. Ireland, Ireland are eligible.

To receive a complete "IMMIGRATION PACKAGE" send a bank draft of US$ 35.00 payable to IC-INTL.
25 Avenue d'Orbaix, 1180 Brussels, Belgium

IC intl

Post to: Rover Cars, Freepost, TK1092, Twickenham, Middlesex, TW25JUN.
Fax to: 081-898 1805.

TITLE _____ INITIALS _____

SURNAME | _____ |

ADDRESS | _____ |
| _____ |
| _____ |

POST CODE | _____ |

TELEPHONE | _____ |

CURRENT CAR (MAKE/MODEL) | _____ |

ROVER 800 SERIES

FT67/51

ROVER 800 SERIES

FT 6/7/15

ROVER

CAR SHOWN K20 SLI: PRICE £19,878 CORRECT AT TIME OF GOING TO PRESS, EXCLUDING ROAD TAX, NUMBER PLATES AND DELIVERY. SUBJECT TO VEHICLE AVAILABILITY *CD SYSTEM ON LIMITED SUPPLY. INOT ON 826 AND 825D. BRITISH CAR RENTAL 0203 716166
TAX FREE SALES INFORMATION 021 478 2101 EXT. 220

UK NEWS

Complaint over Lauto rejected by High Court

By Raymond Hughes, Law Courts Correspondent

A CITY self-regulatory organisation taking urgent action to protect investors is not obliged to hear representations from those who might suffer, the High Court ruled yesterday.

It rejected a complaint that Lauto - the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation - violated natural justice when it made a decision that had the effect of putting an investment company out of business.

The court also ruled that a right of appeal under Lauto rules was limited to the recipient of a notice served under the SRO's intervention powers and did not cover anyone else affected by the notice.

Last October, Lauto served an intervention notice ordering Norwich Union Life Assurance Society to stop taking business from Winchester Group.

The court was told that the order destroyed Winchester because under the financial services regulatory system it could not place business with another life company.

Mr David Ross, a Winchester director and shareholder, asked the court to quash the order. He contended that Lauto had breached the rules of natural justice by not giving Winchester the chance to answer allegations against it before making the order.

He also claimed that under Lauto rules Winchester had a right of appeal, which it had been denied.

Lord Justice Mann said the intervention notice referred to "serious deficiencies in Norwich Union's internal systems for monitoring the performance of Winchester".

The notice had included allegations that Winchester representatives had persuaded investors to cancel their existing insurance policies and switch to Norwich Union; engaged in "other undesirable selling practices"; and appeared to have diverted clients' money into their own bank accounts.

Reference was also made to apparent connections between Winchester and two men arrested for fraud.

The judge said Winchester, which had unquestionably been damaged by the order, contended that the allegations were unfounded and that some of the material on which they were based was inaccurate.

Lauto accepted that some of the material was mistaken and that there might be qualifications to some allegations, he said.

Mr Andrew Collins QC, for Mr Ross, had argued that Lauto, operating in the public domain in the public interest, had a duty to act fairly, and that involved allowing people to answer allegations made against them.

Lord Justice Mann, who noted that Lauto's rules appeared deliberately to omit any requirement to invite representations, said Mr Collins' contention ran counter to an important policy consideration.

"If the law is to imply an obligation to hear representations, then it must also specify with precision to whom that obligation is owed. If persons beyond the subject of the decision are included, then specificity becomes impossible."

CBI adviser urges caution on top pay

By Peter Marsh, Economics Staff

MANY TOP executives may have to take pay cuts as a result of the recession, Professor Douglas MacWilliams, chief economic adviser at the Confederation of British Industry, warned yesterday.

In a spirited defence of the large salary rises awarded recently to some of Britain's top industrialists, Prof MacWilliams said that often such awards were fully justified. However, senior managers might soon have to bear the share of the difficulties caused by the year-long economic decline by accepting a drop in salaries.

"Over the coming year, we are more likely to see pay reductions for senior managers than pay increases as the lagged effects of the recession work through into compensation systems," he told business leaders in London.

Prof MacWilliams said that recent publicity about pay awards reflected "the re-emergence of the spirit of envy". Senior executives in Britain were not highly paid compared with counterparts in other countries.

In deference to the government's exhortations for workers to moderate their pay demands in an effort to reduce inflation, he said large awards for executives might not always be appropriate.

Even though such executives might be eligible for large rises, either because of recent business performance or to keep up with international trends, they might decide "not to take an increase or to donate a proportion to charity if they feel that taking the full increase would have an adverse effect on the running of their business".

Prof MacWilliams said UK chief executives were paid on average 78 per cent less than their German counterparts.

Leisure plan for Cornwall

By Kenneth Gooding, Mining Correspondent

HOPES THAT Cornwall could retain vestiges of its tin mining industry rose yesterday after outline planning permission was given for a £25m leisure centre on the site of the Wheal Jane mine, near Truro.

Carson Holdings, which owns Wheal Jane, said the leisure scheme would provide it with the financial stability to help continue mining at its other mine, South Crofty, nearby.

Low international tin prices killed Wheal Jane last year. In February it seemed that South Crofty must also close when Mr Peter Lilley, secretary of state for industry, withdrew promised government funding.

The project would include a mining heritage centre, an 18-hole golf course and the seven-year phased development of 230 golf and holiday lodges.

A shy tycoon sails into the spotlight

Vanessa Houlder talks to Peter de Savary after his withdrawal from the America's Cup

THE DECISION of Mr Peter de Savary to withdraw from next year's America's Cup has focused attention on one of the most publicity-prone yet secretive entrepreneurs to emerge in the 1980s.

Last weekend, Mr de Savary announced that failure to sign up extra sponsors had forced him to withdraw from the yachting competition, just two weeks after he gave the go-ahead to build the yacht.

The project, which has absorbed £10m, was scuppered for the want of another £2m.

Changing course: Peter de Savary at the helm

Mr de Savary has often described trying to win the America's Cup as his greatest challenge. The abandonment of such a project has raised speculation about the financial health of his business interests, which include an exposure to one of the most depressed property markets the UK has ever seen.

Mr de Savary is adamant that it would be easy for him to provide the extra funds. "I was able to," he says. "But I never said I would, quite the reverse. I am not going to fund the entire America's Cup. I would rather indulge my money on something else."

The question of how much money Mr de Savary has to spare is a matter of conjecture. He will say only that he is not highly geared and "I sold everything and met my liabilities. I am a substantially wealthy person."

After the sale of his LandLeisure Group, the quoted vehicle concern, and taking Highland Partnerships, the property and

RUC chief warns of upsurge in terrorism

By Our Belfast Correspondent

THE TERRORIST threat in Northern Ireland is at its highest level for two years, the province's senior police officer warned yesterday.

Mr Hugh Amessley, Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, said the immediate outlook was grim and the decision by Loyalist terror groups to call off their cease-fire as a result of the failure of political talks had made matters worse. He was launching his annual report for 1990.

He said he was disappointed that the initiative of Mr Peter Brooke, the Northern Ireland Secretary, had not been successful, as progress on the political front helped to marginalise terrorism.

Mr Amessley drew attention to the growing array of weapons used by terrorists against the security forces and said he was hopeful that his application for an additional 400 officers would be approved by the Treasury.

Old Masters depict art's risks

THE dangers in selling your art collection too quickly were well illustrated at Christie's yesterday when a group of Italian Old Masters acquired in the past few years by Mr Frederick Field, the Californian show business entrepreneur, to decorate his home in Beverly Hills, found few takers.

The saleroom expected a total of about $5.5m for the 32 paintings, but raised only $1.7m. The most important work, a Holy Family painted in 1540 by Tintoretto - his first signed work - went unsold at $450,000 and a Veronese portrait of a gentleman sold at the bottom of its estimate for $605,000. Another Field picture, Fortune under a Crown by Guido Reni, made $440,000.

Compassionate for Christie's came the general sale of Old Master pictures that followed. The Union of Cupid and Psyche, a previously unsold work painted in 1734 by Charles-Joseph Natoire, sold for $257,000 against an estimate of $70,000. It was easily a record for this French court artist.

Sotheby's did well, selling English furniture for $1.7m, with 18 per cent unsold. Malaga, the London dealer, sold $250,000 - about three times the estimate - for a George III satinwood and mahogany commode in excellent condition, and $27,000 for a matching side table also made around 1775. A George II mahogany writing table of 1765 doubled its top estimate, selling for $28,200.

Antony Thornicroft

FT-ACTUARIES SHARE INDICES

© The Financial Times Ltd 1991. Compiled by the Financial Times Ltd in conjunction with the Institute of Actuaries and the Faculty of Actuaries

EQUITY GROUPS & SUB-SECTIONS		Friday July 5 1991										Highs and Lows Index
Figures in parentheses show number of stocks per section		Index	Day's Change %	Est. Sales (Mil.)	Gross Sales (Act. vs (25%)	Est. P/E (Ratio)	Vol. (1991)	Index	Index	Index	Index	1991		1990		1989		1988		1987		1986		1985		1984		1983		1982		1981		1980		1979		1978		1977		1976		1975		1974		1973		1972		1971		1970		1969		1968		1967		1966		1965		1964		1963		1962		1961		1960		1959		1958		1957		1956		1955		1954		1953		1952		1951		1950		1949		1948		1947		1946		1945		1944		1943		1942		1941		1940		1939		1938		1937		1936		1935		1934		1933		1932		1931		1930		1929		1928		1927		1926		1925		1924		1923		1922		1921		1920		1919		1918		1917		1916		1915		1914		1913		1912		1911		1910		1909		1908		1907		1906		1905		1904		1903		1902		1901		1900		1899		1898		1897		1896		1895		1894		1893		1892		1891		1890		1889		1888		1887		1886		1885		1884		1883		1882		1881		1880		1879		1878		1877		1876		1875		1874		1873		1872		1871		1870		1869		1868		1867		1866		1865		1864		1863		1862		1861		1860		1859		1858		1857		1856		1855		1854		1853		1852		1851		1850		1849		1848		1847		1846		1845		1844		1843		1842		1841		1840		1839		1838		1837		1836		1835		1834		1833		1832		1831		1830		1829		1828		1827		1826		1825		1824		1823		1822		1821		1820		1819		1818		1817		1816		1815		1814		1813		1812		1811		1810		1809		1808		1807		1806		1805		1804		1803		1802		1801		1800		1799		1798		1797		1796		1795		1794		1793		1792		1791		1790		1789		1788		1787		1786		1785		1784		1783		1782		1781		1780		1779		1778		1777		1776		1775		1774		1773		1772		1771		1770		1769		1768		1767		1766		1765		1764		1763		1762		1761		1760		1759		1758		1757		1756		1755		1754		1753		1752		1751		1750		1749		1748		1747		1746		1745		1744		1743		1742		1741		1740		1739		1738		1737		1736		1735		1734		1733		1732		1731		1730		1729		1728		1727		1726		1725		1724		1723		1722		1721		1720		1719		1718		1717		1716		1715		1714		1713		1712		1711		1710		1709		1708		1707		1706		1705		1704		1703		1702		1701		1700		1699		1698		1697		1696		1695		1694		1693		1692		1691		1690		1689		1688		1687		1686		1685		1684		1683		1682		1681		1680		1679		1678		1677		1676		1675		1674		1673		1672		1671		1670		1669		1668		1667		1666		1665		1664		1663		1662		1661		1660		1659		1658		1657		1656		1655		1654		1653		1652		1651		1650		1649		1648		1647		1646		1645		1644		1643		1642		1641		1640		1639		1638		1637		1636		1635		1634		1633		1632		1631		1630		1629		1628		1627		1626		1625		1624		1623		1622		1621		1620		1619		1618		1617		1616		1615		1614		1613		1612		1611		1610		1609		1608		1607		1606		1605		1604		1603		1602		1601		1600		1599		1598		1597		1596		1595		1594		1593		1592		1591		1590		1589		1588		1587		1586		1585		1584		1583		1582		1581		1580		1579		1578		1577		1576		1575		1574		1573		1572		1571		1570		1569		1568		1567		1566		1565		1564		1563		1562		1561		1560		1559		1558		1557		1556		1555		1554		1553		1552		1551		1550		1549		1548		1547		1546		1545		1544		1543		1542		1541		1540		1539		1538		1537		1536		1535		1534		1533		1532		1531		1530		1529		1528		1527		1526		1525		1524		1523		1522		1521		1520		1519		1518		1517		1516		1515		1514		1513		1512		1511		1510		1509		1508		1507		1506		1505		1504		1503		1502		1501		1500		1499		1498		1497		1496		1495		1494		1493		1492		1491		1490		1489		1488		1487		1486		1485		1484		1483		1482		1481		1480		1479		1478		1477		1476		1475		1474		1473		1472		1471		1470		1469		1468		1467		1466		1465		1464		1463		1462		1461		1460		1459		1458		1457		1456		1455		1454		1453		1452		1451		1450		1449		1448		1447		1446		1445		1444		1443		1442		1441		1440		1439		1438		1437		1436		1435		1434		1433		1432		1431		1430		1429		1428		1427		1426		1425		1424		1423		1422		1421		1420		1419		1418		1417		1416		1415		1414		1413		1412		1411		1410		1409		1408		1407		1406		1405		1404		1403		1402		1401		1400		1399		1398		1397		1396		1395		1394		1393		1392		1391		1390		1389		1388		1387		1386		1385		1384		1383		1382		1381		1380		1379		1378		1377		1376		1375		1374		1373		1372		1371		1370		1369		1368		1367		1366		1365		1364		1363		1362		1361		1360		1359		1358		1357		1356		1355		1354		1353		1352		1351		1350		1349		1348		1347		1346		1345		1344		1343		1342		1341		1340		1339		1338		1337		1336		1335		1334		1333		1332		1331		1330		1329		1328		1327		1326		1325		1324		1323		1322		1321		1320		1319		1318		1317		1316		1315		1314		1313		1312		1311		1310		1309		1308		1307		1306		1305		1304		1303		1302		1301		1300		1299		1298		1297		1296		1295		1294		1293		1292		1291		1290		1289		1288		1287		1286		1285		1284		1283		1282		1281		1280		1279		1278		1277		1276		1275		1274		1273		1272		1271		1270		1269		1268		1267		1266		1265		1264		1263		1262		1261		1260		1259		1258		1257		1256		1255		1254		1253		1252		1251		1250		1249		1248		1247		1246		1245		1244		1243		1242		1241		1240		1239		1238		1237		1236		1235		1234		1233		1232		1231		1230		1229		1228		1227		1226		1225		1224		1223		1222		1221		1220		1219		1218		1217		1216		1215		1214		1213		1212		1211		1210		1209		1208		1207		1206		1205		1204		1203		1202		1201		1200		1199		1198		1197		1196		1195		1194		1193		1192		1191		1190		1189		1188		1187		1186		1185		1184		1183		1182		1181		1180		1179		1178		1177		1176		1175		1174		1173		1172		1171		1170		1169		1168		1167		1166		1165		1164		1163		1162		1161		1160		1159		1158		1157		1156		1155		1154		1153		1152		1151		1150		1149		1148		1147		1146		1145		1144		1143		1142		1141		1140		1139		1138		1137		1136		1135		1134		1133		1132		1131		1130		1129		1128		1127		1126		1125		1124		1123		1122		1121		1120		1119		1118		1117		1116		1115		1114		1113		1112		1111		1110		1109		1108		1107		1106		1105		1104		1103		1102		1101		1100		1099		1098		1097		1096		1095		1094		1093		1092		1091		1090		1089		1088		1087		1086		1085		1084		1083		1082		1081		1080		1079		1078		1077		1076		1075		1074		1073		1072		1071		1070		1069		1068		1067		1066		1065		1064		1063		1062		1061		1060		1059		1058		1057		1056		1055		1054		1053		1052		1051		1050		1049		1048		1047		1046		1045		1044		1043		1042		1041		1040		1039		1038		1037		1036		1035		1034		1033		1032		1031		1030		1029		1028		1027		1026		1025		1024		1023		1022		1021		1020		1019		1018		1017		1016		1015		1014		1013		1012		1011		1010		1009		1008		1007		1006		1005		1004		1003		1002		1001		1000		999		998		997		996		995		994		993		992		991		990		989		988		987		986		985		984		983		982		981		980		979		978		977		976		975		974

UK COMPANY NEWS

£96m rights issue by Mountleigh

By Vanessa Houlder, Property Correspondent

MOUNTLEIGH Group, the property and retail company which owns a net £560m, yesterday said it was seeking a £96m rights issue to finance its new equity facilities, including the acquisition of the Department of Health's property portfolio.

The company's shares fell by a third after it announced the rights issue and subscription and reported a 50c pre-tax loss for the year to April 30. The loss included an £80.3m exceptional provision against Mountleigh's UK properties.

Mountleigh said its banking facilities had been renegotiated on condition that the equity issue was successful. The 2-for-1 rights issue at 25p, which will be split down by 15p to 36p, comes six weeks after the Gordon P Getty family trust bought an 11 per cent stake for 100p per share from Mr Nelson Peltz and Mr Peter May, two entrepreneurs, who bought control of the company from Mr Tony Clegg in November 1989.

Two new investors are being brought into the company as a result of an unusual underwriting structure. Hotel Equities Investors, which is controlled by the Pritzker family, the Chicago-based investors which own the Hyatt hotel chain, and Accumulator, a property investment company based in Copenhagen, will sub-underwrite 36 per cent of the issue.

Mr Getty said the company was not required to take up all these shares, they will be issued with enough shares at 25p each to give them a holding of 5.95 per cent and 5 per cent respectively.

Mr Peltz, Mr May and the Getty Trust will not participate in the rights issue but will take up their 22.5 per cent entitlement by direct subscription at 25p per share. They will also sub-underwrite the first 12.5 per cent of the rights issue, which is underwritten by UBS Phillips & Drew.

The rights issue will reduce the 105 per cent gearing to 70 per cent. An accelerated programme of property disposals is expected to reduce gearing to 50 per cent by the year-end.

Mountleigh was unable to fund the development and cost-cutting programme of Galeria's, its Spanish department store group, where operating profits fell from £23.6m to £15.3m. Its banks have agreed to release their guarantee over Galeria's, which will allow it to raise finance in Spain.

Group turnover was £664.9m compared with £645.1m in 1989-90, when the pre-tax loss was £48.8m. After the rights issue, the pro forma net asset value will be 94.5p per share, compared with net assets of 287.8p (basic) at April 30 and 284p (restated) the previous year.

Subject to approval of the rights issue, the final dividend will be 0.75p, for a total of 2p (4.75p).

Maxwell vehicle in £57.5m bid for First Tokyo Index

By Philip Coggan, Personal Finance Editor

READINGTON Investments, a company controlled by Mr Robert Maxwell, the newspaper publisher, is making a recommended £57.5m cash offer for First Tokyo Index Trust, following a substantial programme of securities lending between the two Maxwell-controlled companies which may have affected First Tokyo's investment trust status.

The offer document says that London & Bishopsgate International Investment Management (LBI), the fund management group, conducted a programme of securities lending with London & Bishopsgate Holdings (LBH), a subsidiary of Readington, in 1989 and 1990. LBI is a subsidiary of LBI.

The document adds that "the manner and terms of the securities lending programme should have been approved by a resolution of the board". The material contracts section of the document refers to "various oral agreements entered into between the two companies in May 1989 and March 1991 and made between LBI (on behalf of First Tokyo) and LBH under which securities of First Tokyo were lent to LBI".

As of December 31 1990, the value of securities lent under the programme amounted to £57.5m, compared with the trust's investment portfolio of £44.8m. The trust made an exceptional gain of £595,000 which related to additional fees for 1989 lending, following the document says, "a full review of the securities lending programme".

The document says that the company's status as an investment trust "may have been affected by the income arising from the securities lending programme". But LBI has indemnified First Tokyo against any liability to taxation arising from the loss of investment trust status.

The trust's difficulties with the lending programme were believed to be viewed by the Maxwell group as a "back office snafu".

First Tokyo was reconstituted in early 1989 as an index-tracking trust with the aim of matching the performance of the first section of the Tokyo stock market. The offer is cash for the formula asset value of the trust, worth about 131p per share.

Headington Investments is making the offer, the document states, because "it believes that there will be a rise in the Japanese market". In addition, a trust committee, which calls for a resolution to shareholders on winding-up or the discount to net assets exceeds 8 per cent in the last 12 weeks of a financial year - an event which has only occurred.

Bishopsgate Investment Management, which holds 24.9 per cent of the trust as trustee for the pension fund of Maxwell Communication Corporation, Mirror Group Newspapers and AGB International, is accepting the offer.

ASCoT net asset value at 111.64p

Fully diluted net asset value at 111.64p. ASCoT net asset value at 111.64p. ASCoT net asset value at 111.64p.

Tiphook more than doubled at £76.1m helped by SeaCon buy

By Jane Fuller

TIPHOOK, which doubled its container rental business last year by buying Sea Containers' fleet, more than doubled pre-tax profit from £33.1m to £76.1m in 1990-91.

The increase was achieved on a 73 per cent rise in turnover to £303.1m (£174.7m) in the year to April 30. Earnings per share, however, advanced less rapidly to 65.2p (48p) because of paper issued to fund the acquisition.

The share price gained 21p to close at 474p.

With the container fleet growing from 224,000 to 426,000 units, that division's turnover doubled to £124m (£71.2m) and its pre-tax profit went up 2.5 times to £59.9m (£24.3m). The US and Asian markets had remained buoyant, offsetting softer conditions in Europe. A further 30,000 units are expected to be added this year.

Mr Eric Goodwin, deputy chairman, said the 200,000 containers acquired from Sea Containers had been absorbed by increasing the section's workforce by less than 35 people to make a total of about 180. The units had been rapidly added to the central computer system.

Tiphook has become the world's second largest container operator. It leapt from fifth to third early last year through the £456m (£340m) Sea Containers deal; the top two players merged.

Genstar, a subsidiary of General Electric, acquired the container assets of Irel, another US concern, last October, giving it a fleet of 980,000.

In trailer rental, the fleet was increased partly by acquisition from 20,600 to 33,000. Turnover grew to £128.6m (£76.2m), but pre-tax profit advanced much more slowly to £10.1m (£8.1m).

While the fleets in Germany and Denmark grew, other areas were weak. The UK only broke even and utilisation rates fell to little more than 60 per cent.

Special equipment, including the fast-growing rail fleet, improved to £2.5m pre-tax profit, compared with a £600,000 loss. Financial services contributed a static £3.6m.

Interest payments of £57m were covered about 2.3 times by operating profit. Borrowings rose to £785m, nearly three times shareholders' funds. Mr Goodwin said that although debt was expected to rise again this year, by at least £80m, gearing should fall. With 60 per cent of the debt in dollars, the average interest rate was about 9 per cent.

Capital spending was expected to fall from £200m to £170m.

Although the tax rate rose, it was less than 7 per cent, helped substantially by the use of capital allowances.

The final dividend goes up to 10.3p (8.5p), making a total of 13.8p (9.2p), a 50 per cent increase.

Eric Goodwin: expects debt to rise again this year lainer operator. It leapt from fifth to third early last year through the £456m (£340m) Sea Containers deal; the top two players merged.

Genstar, a subsidiary of General Electric, acquired the container assets of Irel, another US concern, last October, giving it a fleet of 980,000.

In trailer rental, the fleet was increased partly by acquisition from 20,600 to 33,000. Turnover grew to £128.6m (£76.2m), but pre-tax profit advanced much more slowly to £10.1m (£8.1m).

While the fleets in Germany and Denmark grew, other areas were weak. The UK only broke even and utilisation rates fell to little more than 60 per cent.

Special equipment, including the fast-growing rail fleet, improved to £2.5m pre-tax profit, compared with a £600,000 loss. Financial services contributed a static £3.6m.

Interest payments of £57m were covered about 2.3 times by operating profit. Borrowings rose to £785m, nearly three times shareholders' funds. Mr Goodwin said that although debt was expected to rise again this year, by at least £80m, gearing should fall. With 60 per cent of the debt in dollars, the average interest rate was about 9 per cent.

Capital spending was expected to fall from £200m to £170m.

Although the tax rate rose, it was less than 7 per cent, helped substantially by the use of capital allowances.

The final dividend goes up to 10.3p (8.5p), making a total of 13.8p (9.2p), a 50 per cent increase.

See Lex

See Lex

Split prompts £9m bid for Thurgar

By Andrew Bolger

A BOARDROOM split at Thurgar, which makes windows, doors and other plastic products, has led to an £9.5m offer being made for the company by Heywood Williams, the UK's largest window distributor.

Huddersfield-based Heywood said it had only tabled the offer after attempts to open talks with the chairman of Thurgar, Mr Peter Johnson, had been rebuffed.

However, Heywood also said it had received an "irrevocable acceptance" of the offer from the Nye family trusts of which Mr Cliff Nye, the chief executive of Thurgar, is a director. The Nye trusts own 17.7 per cent of Thurgar.

Heywood is offering one new share and 180p in cash for every 10 Thurgar shares. Heywood shares closed 3p lower at 28p, making the offer worth 42.5p for each Thurgar share - up 15p to 40p.

Beeson Gregory, Thurgar's financial advisers, said Mr Johnson was out of the country yesterday and there would be no formal response to the offer until the board met early next week. Meantime, it advised Thurgar holders not to sell their shares.

Mr Nye said he could not comment on the offer, or his position as chief executive, until the board had met.

Mr Ralph Hinchliffe, chairman of Heywood, said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

He said the principal attraction of Thurgar was its large plant in Gloucester producing blending powder, which his company could extrude into PVC. It could also put its glass into Thurgar's window frames.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

Thurgar, which has been hit by the downturn in housebuilding, incurred a pre-tax loss of £56,000 on turnover of £43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

£43m in 1990, and passed its final dividend. At the year-end, it had gearing of 98 per cent.

Heywood, which is being advised by Lloyds, has never before made a hostile bid. Mr Hinchliffe said he hoped there could be positive discussions with the board, leading to a recommendation for the offer.

John Menzies falls to £21.5m

By James Buxton

JOHN MENZIES, the Edinburgh-based retail and wholesale group, yesterday blamed what Mr John Menzies, its chairman, called "the most difficult year I can remember" for its 26 per cent profit fall.

Pre-tax profits for the 53 weeks to May 4 were down by £7.8m to £21.5m. Of this, £4m comprises the special provision announced in February to cover an exceptional loss in its Hammicks book wholesaling business. In addition, interest charges almost doubled to £4.5m (£2.3m).

Sales, however, rose by 13 per cent to £1,026m and the dividend for the year is lifted by 0.4p to 9.4p with a proposed final of 8p (5.75p).

John Menzies Wholesale, which handles newspaper distribution, and T&D, which is a wholesaler in home entertainment, both exceeded their budgets, and Early Learning Centres produced outstanding results. Hammicks bookshops showed "healthy growth".

Sales volumes in the retail side remained almost static with the average transaction only £1.50. The office equipment market was depressed.

Because of last year's £15.2m provision for Early Learning Centres in the US, no sales are recorded from this branch of Menzies' activities. The US chain has been restructured and Mr Ronald Noel-Paton, group managing director, hopes it can be sold in due course.

COMMENT

Menzies gives only the sparsest of information about the relative performance of its sectors but what it does disclose shows that the low-margin wholesale businesses are doing fairly well while most of the retail side is not. Analysts do not believe the company is improving its competitiveness against WH Smith, its main rival, and even without the recession it is difficult to forget that twice in eight months it has had to make provisions for managerial disasters. One with Early Learning Centres in the US and the other with Hammicks closer to home in Birmingham. Yesterday's results were rather worse than some had expected, and the market appears to be looking for pre-tax profits of about £28m this year, which suggests a prospective multiple of just over 10. That is no better than a hold.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

month in connection with the management buy-out offer through Matsuda 374, the difference arising from an adjustment following the year-end audit.

A few days ago Dewhurst, which also serves Marks and Spencer with textiles and toiletries, made a higher counter-bid for Kingsgrange, which was recommended by the independent directors and advisers.

Turnover for the year slipped to £20m (£20.9m) but margins improved from 6.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Toiletries sales declined 17 per cent mainly because it was decided not to pursue low margin contracts. Earnings per share amounted to 1.5p (1.5p).

Trading was particularly difficult in the last four months of the year.

Real ale revival behind Fuller gain

By Philip Rawstone

THE REAL ale revival is behind the profits of Fuller Smith & Turner, the west London-based brewer of ESB, London Pride, and Chiswick beers.

Volume sales of the beers - which have won five of the 18 annual Campaign for Real Ale awards - increased by 14 per cent last year as the brewer produced more than 100,000 barrels for the first time in its 146-year history.

That helped lift pre-tax profits for the year ended March 30 by 6 per cent to £9.01m (£8.52m). It was affected by a drop in investment income from £74,000 to £108,000, following the 50m acquisition of 44 pubs from Allied-Lyons.

Distribution deals with Bass and Whitbread helped Fuller to push sales of the beers as "guest ales" in pubs throughout the country. Free trade volumes rose 30 per cent and were still rising.

Exports of the beers, now distributed by Grolsch in the US, grew by 67 per cent in volume and now accounted for 3.6 per cent of Fuller's production.

The government's "guest ale" order - which allows tenants of the major brewers to stock a cash-conditioned ale from another supplier - had been slow to take effect. "But demand for well-known, strongly-branded real ales is now increasing fast," said Mr Anthony Fuller, the chairman.

Fuller's had anticipated the trend by implementing a new corporate identity and brand marketing programme. It had increased brewery capacity by 32,000 barrels and was embarking on a £1.8m modernisation of its Chiswick brewhouse.

Operating profits were 15 per cent higher at £9.9m (£7.75m) on turnover up 18 per cent to £70m (£59.5m). Earnings per share improved to 24.38p (£22.32p). A final dividend of 4p gives 6.15p (5.5p) for the year.

Mr Fuller said the newly-acquired pubs did not contribute to profits in the first half year but were now producing a return of over 11 per cent.

The managed pubs - 75 of the total estate of 200 - produced a "very solid performance" with profits up 15 per cent.

Dividends shown pence per share net except where otherwise stated. *Equivalent after allowing for scrip issue. †On capital increased by rights and/or acquisition issues. $USM stock.

Dividends shown pence per share net except where otherwise stated. *Equivalent after allowing for scrip issue. †On capital increased by rights and/or acquisition issues. $USM stock.

Weekend July 6/July 7 1991

Capital to the rescue

WHO SUFFERED from the huge current account surpluses and deficits of the 1980s? Certainly not the OECD countries, where incomes per head grew by a quarter per cent over the decade. As the OECD's latest Economic Outlook points out, those who worried about a US current account deficit equivalent to more than 3 per cent of GNP in mid-decade need not have bothered: the US deficit fell almost as smoothly as it rose.

The victims of these large current account swings were in the developing world. It was at their expense that the US first scooped the global pool of savings and then, when it at last lowered its demands upon the world's surplus savings, insisted that the surplus from Japan and Germany be reduced at the same time.

The US has been remarkably successful on this latter point. German unification has eliminated a current account surplus that was running at 5 per cent of GNP as recently as the beginning of 1989. From being the biggest capital exporter in Europe, Germany has thus become a capital importer in 1991 and seems unlikely to run a trade surplus of any size for some time to come. That leaves Japan as the world's only big capital exporter with a current account surplus expected to run at between 1-1/2 per cent of GNP over the next year or so, itself far below the peak levels of a few years ago.

Since the OECD expects the US deficit to rise from 0.2 per cent of GNP this year to one per cent in 1992, these figures point to a period of capital shortages in the world's capital markets. Yet talk of capital shortages can be overcome. The greatest need for capital in the global system may lie in the Soviet Union; yet it seems highly unlikely to be satisfied, least of all through capital issues in private financial markets, for the foreseeable future. Eastern Europe's need for capital is smaller and likely to be stretched out over a long period. As for the western countries of the Gulf, the figures are not big enough to impose strain on the markets.

Financing doubts

Nevertheless, the global shifts may be important for the UK, which is running a current account deficit equivalent to 1 per cent of GNP even in the depths of recession. As the deficit increases with economic recovery, doubts about financing will be raised again. Yet the message of the 1990s appears to be that capital and currency markets provide a fairly resilient adjustment mechanism. They can overshoot. But on balance they work rather better than many markets that operate in slower motion.

There is greater cause for concern over the future of the trading system, and within that system, of policy towards agriculture, the sticking point in the Uruguay Round. Total transfers from taxpayers and consumers to agricultural support, with the European Community sharing a large portion of the blame, are estimated to have reached a record $300bn in 1990. That, like the pre-emptive American claim on surplus world savings, hit the OECD badly. And in the First World, as the OECD points out, any failure to improve agricultural policy makes related budgetary, economic and trade problems more acute.

Labour problems

The labour market poses equally intractable problems. Average unemployment in the OECD area never fell below 6 per cent in the 1980s. It was a particular conundrum for the European Community, where the rate remained at over 8 per cent. The labour market remains the Achilles heel of the OECD economy, where the OECD expects unemployment to rise almost to the same level as France, at 9.5 per cent, in the first half of 1992. Forecasts also predict a rather slower climb out of the recession than their counterparts at the British Treasury.

With a batch of altogether despondent statistics this week in the UK, pointing to dismal conditions in the car and housing markets, there is no reason to quarrel with the OECD's temperate optimism. But as the OECD report also remarks in its discussion of monetary policy and inflation, careful policy judgment is called for, because the OECD's forecasts are typically not discounted for some time after they have occurred.

None the less, opportunities to lower interest rates should be seized, since they remain very high in real terms. Reductions need not be at the expense of sterling's position within the exchange rate mechanism. The UK, the US and now Japan have all succeeded in cutting rates without serious damage to their respective currencies. It is quite possible that the prospect of higher real returns following lower interest rates will lead to a stronger currency, not a weaker one. The same may be true of the political prospects of the government are seen to improve further. And if the gamble fails, interest rates, a price like any other, can always be raised again.

Whatever else may be said about the conflict in Yugoslavia, no-one should claim they were not warned. Ever since the death of Josip Broz Tito in 1980, and especially since the anti-communist revolutions that swept eastern Europe in 1989, prophets of doom have been predicting chaos and bloodshed between rival nationalities. Well, here they are. As if to mock the self-congratulatory paeans of the last two years, and to expose the fragility of the new European "architecture" put in place by the Paris summit last November, Yugoslavia is flying apart. The southern Slav identity, successfully asserted against older and larger multinational states in 1918, has broken down into smaller ethnic components. The Croats and Slovenes have made the leap from "nationality" to "nation" to "nation-state". At least six of the 15 Soviet republics are doing the same, and Slovakia is not far off it. Nor will the phenomenon stop there. All over eastern Europe national identities are asserting or reasserting themselves. (Even though most political scientists consider the nation as we now understand it a modern phenomenon, few if any nationalists ever admit to starting from scratch. They usually look back to a golden age of statehood, however remote or mythical — though in this respect Slovenia does seem to be an exception.) And in all too many cases, starting with Serbs and Croats, their claims and aspirations are not mutually compatible.

But forewarned does not seem to have been forearmed. However widely predicted the explosion of ethnic animosities, Europe is not exactly ready with an answer, and even west Europeans have little to feel smug about. This very week, after all, Mr Peter Brooke, the Northern Ireland secretary, found himself obliged to end the talks he had taken such infinite pains to get started on the constitutional status of the province, and only a week ago in Seville a parcel bomb sent by Basque extremists killed four people and injured 50. The underlying issue in both cases is, precisely, the existence of rival national identities with incompatible claims.

"Big fleas have little fleas upon their backs to bite 'em. They in turn have lesser fleas, and so ad infinitum," wrote Jonathan Swift, appropriately enough an Anglo-Irishman, nearly 300 years ago. In the "forum on the future of the nation state", to be broadcast next Wednesday on BBC Radio 4, a Croat speaker waxed eloquent on the Croat right to national independence, but no less indignant at the suggestion that Croatia's "national territory" might be amputated through the accession of districts with a local Serb majority. Irish nationalists who fought for independence from Britain in the name of national self-determination refused to concede the same right to Ulster unionists.

Mr Boris Yeltsin, who firmly asserts the sovereignty of the Russian republic (of which he is president) against the Soviet Union, has yet to recognise similar claims of sovereignty put forward by Tatars, Bashkirs and other ethnic groups on his republic's territory. Mr Zviad Gamsakhurdia, the Georgian nationalist leader, has no time for Abkhaz or South Ossetian self-determination. Nor do Slovak nationalists have much sympathy for the grievances of Germans, Hungarians and Gypsies "national minorities" within Slovakia.

Such examples can be multiplied indefinitely. Not that by listing them one provides a conclusive argument against the national aspirations of the larger group, as those resisting such aspirations sometimes appear to suppose; nor that every group's claim to statehood must be treated a priori as equally valid.

All kinds of criteria of viability can be used to distinguish one case from another: size of territory; homogeneity

The Yugoslav crisis has highlighted the centrifugal forces afflicting nation states in Europe, writes Edward Mortimer

When nation into state won't go or unanimity of population; economic self-sufficiency (would any state nowadays, however large?); willingness to kill and be killed for the sake of independence; external recognition and support — this last being determined in some cases by a combination of the others. But in many cases by feelings of ethnic or religious solidarity or by desire to make trouble for the state from which secession is being sought.

A body of experts in some lakeside ivory tower could draw up a test to be applied throughout Europe or even worldwide. But in real life such things are decided by the balance of political forces at a given place and time. All too often it takes bloodshed to establish just where that balance lies; and all too often the losing side has hopes, realistic or otherwise, that if bloodshed is kept going long enough the balance will eventually change.

Some will argue that the break-up of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union, and the strength of national feelings now revealed, have revealed the futility of attempting to unite different nations in a federal whole, and notably the danger of imposing a federal structure on the European Community. Yet it is surely a little facile to equate the authoritarian communist structures of eastern Europe with arrangements freely contracted between democratic states in western Europe. In fact most if not all of the east European nations now asserting their freedom express eagerness not for absolute sovereignty (which they know is an illusion) but for membership of an enlarged and fully-integrated EC. Others, with equal conviction, will say that the chaos now breaking out in eastern Europe proves the wisdom of holding fast to existing state structures. That view tends to be favoured by the established governments of established states. It was expressed, for instance, by the Swiss foreign minister, Mr Rene Felber, last Monday. "We have every sympathy," he said, "for small peoples who aspire to affirm their national identity by democratic methods. But that does not mean we can accept the unilateral alteration of frontiers, which would only create new imbalances."

The trouble with such statements, from the point of view of the "small peoples" in question, is that it gives the larger entity a veto on their independence. Whereas everyone would agree that two states should not be merged without the consent of both their peoples, it seems that two or more peoples can be held together in one state even if one of them wishes to leave, and even though one or both of them may not have been consulted when — perhaps in a less democratic or less peace-loving age — the union was first set up.

There is always room for dispute about the validity of an act of self-determination supposed to have taken place in the past, whether it be the decision of the Scottish parliament to accept the union with England in 1707, or — a much clearer case of duress — the "decision" of the Baltic states to join the Soviet Union in 1940. But in any case it is not obvious that past generations had the power to bind their successors in perpetuity. As Lord Russell (the historian Conrad Russell) points out in the Radio 4 forum, national identity is not something eternal and immutable. It develops over time, and international law needs to be flexible enough to register the changes that occur. Twenty years ago a majority of Slovenes might spontaneously have identified themselves as Yugoslavs. It is unlikely they would do so today.

In fact, international law is almost infinitely flexible in adjusting to changes after the event. What is much harder is to devise political structures, and above all to inculcate political attitudes, flexible enough to allow such changes to be registered by free vote, rather than through trial by battle.

Perhaps the Yugoslav experience is moving us in that direction. The way that many west European governments have adjusted their position in reaction to the use of force by the Yugoslav army (and to the impressive resistance of the Slovenes) has been a little too rapid to be comfortable. Can we really continue to demand that each would-be nation seeking international recognition must first pay a price in human lives? I suspect not, and that we shall see the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) moving, with much acrimonious dispute, towards some kind of requirement that a plebiscite on independence be held whenever and wherever a certain proportion of the adult citizens inhabiting a given area (of perhaps a certain minimum size and population) signs a petition demanding it.

Yet even if such a formula is agreed, it is no good imagining that all problems involving a clash of national identities will thereby be solved. Whatever the criteria established, there will always be minorities, too small or too scattered to make good their claim to self-determination in the sense of separating themselves from the state to which they now belong and taking their homes with them.

In the past the "solution" to such problems has too often been to encourage or even force the people concerned to emigrate, or in extreme cases simply to exterminate them. As recently as 1989 the Bulgarian communist regime confronted its Turkish minority with a stark choice between complete assimilation (abandoning name, tongue and even religion) and emigration (abandoning homes and property). It may be that some east European states, or at any rate some political parties within them, are still contemplating such "solutions", but at least no European state is now willing to do so openly. All European governments would now agree in principle that the only real solution is somehow to make the minorities feel at home in the states where they live, so that they do not feel the need to move either themselves or the interstate borders.

But not all European governments have yet fully accepted that this can be achieved, on the one hand by maximising free contact across interstate borders (as is happening in western Europe), and on the other by guaranteeing the rights of the people concerned not only as individuals but as groups with their own national identity, culture and institutions. That means, for example, giving them the right to use their own language, not just for private purposes but in schools and the news media (including television), and allowing them an adequate share of state resources to enjoy that right in practice. This is far from being the case at present even in France, let alone in Romania or Turkey.

Still, here too there is progress. The remarks of the Swiss foreign minister quoted above were made at the opening session of an official CSCE Meeting of Experts on National Minorities, the holding of which was one of the decisions taken, on the Swiss government's suggestion, at last year's Copenhagen summit. Its purpose is "to hold a thorough discussion on the issues of national minorities and of the rights of persons belonging to them, with due attention to the diversity of situations and to the legal, historical, political and economic backgrounds". The meeting, which lasts until July 19, is reviewing the implementation of existing CSCE commitments (notably the affirmation at last year's Copenhagen conference that "persons belonging to national minorities have the right freely to express, preserve and develop their ethnic, cultural, linguistic or religious identity and to maintain and develop their culture in all its aspects, free of any attempts at assimilation against their will"), and also considering "new measures" aimed at improving that implementation. Although its work has so far been overshadowed by the Yugoslav crisis, its conclusions could be of great importance in avoiding such crises in the future.

MAN IN THE NEWS

John Birt
The man with the plan goes to the top

By Raymond Snoddy

what motivates him — whether it is power, influence, or the desire to see his belief in his own strategic thinking recognised. The Oxford engineering graduate simply describes the BBC as "the biggest Maccos set in town". But certainly greed is not his main motivating force.

If he has stayed at LWT he would have inherited the managing director's job now occupied by Mr Greg Dyke. LWT's retention of its franchise would mean that Mr Dyke could be worth as much as $2m if the company's share price reaches a particular level.

John Birt had a second chance to become seriously rich when he was offered very large sums of money to lead an ITV franchise bid. He said no. Probably he has wanted to be director-general of the BBC from the moment he arrived at the corporation. Maybe he took Mr Checkland at his word when the former BBC accountant said after his appointment that he only wanted to serve a single five-year term. Mr Checkland obviously changed his mind and was clearly disappointed to be offered a one-year extension to his contract rather than three years.

The decision means that Mr Birt will be the key player in the most crucial event facing the corporation — the renegotiation of its Royal Charter in 1996. He will have to face the big questions: what the future structure of the BBC should be and how it will respond to growing competition from cable and satellite television.

In the press release the BBC issued on Tuesday announcing Mr Birt's appointment he was quoted as saying: "The main tasks facing the BBC in the 1990s are to work out what programme services the BBC can best provide in a burgeoning radio and television marketplace; and to ensure that — in all of its activities — the BBC is as lean and efficient as any of its competitors."

Unusually for a press release, the statement accurately reflected reality. Some flesh however can be put on retreat. When the market is right there could be an expansion into satellite services such as news, sport or arts through joint ventures, although licence-fee money could not be used for such ventures.

Mr Birt has already proved his ability to draw up rational plans, charm the BBC governors and leave both Conservative and Labour politicians with the belief that he is really "one of us". He has yet to prove that he can lead and motivate a large creative organisation like the BBC.

John thinks everyone's mind is like his and that once he has drawn up a plan every one will go off and implement it. It's not necessarily like that, said someone who knows him well.

Unlike the present director-general, Mr Birt is a former programme maker who has produced programmes as diverse as the comedy Nice Time and Weekend Update, the current affairs programme where the "mission to explain" was first put into practice. As director of programmes at LWT he was responsible for Cilla Black and Blind Date.

A former producer at Weekend Update yesterday rated Mr Birt as one of the most intellectually able men he has ever met but also a man whose diffidence prevented professional colleagues from getting close. He recalled the reaction when John Birt was appointed LWT director of programmes in 1982: "Everyone was aghast. How can this man who has created Weekend Update, seen by many as dry and boring, take over as director of programmes? But he's very smart and knows what's needed. He didn't run LWT programmes like current affairs. I don't know that LWT ever had a better period than under his stewardship. He brought Cilla and Blind Date — a programme that made ITV's top 10."

As the BBC enters one of the most difficult periods in its history, some of those who are aghast at his appointment must hope that Mr Birt also knows what needs to be done at the corporation.

NORWEGIAN AMERICAN LINE

WE CARE FOR MORE THAN CARS!

International vehicle transport remains at the heart of Norwegian American Line's business, but that's not where it ends. We are active in a number of related fields and are continuing to expand into new business areas. We are in a position to ensure that every step in our operation is based on the accumulated experience and high standards of quality which we have acquired over the years. This is how NOSAC continues to be one of the leading car-carrier operators, under long-term contract to manufacturers of motor vehicles.

BULK TRANSPORT
TRINITY BULK CARRIERS operates 20 handymax bulk vessels. Backed by an experienced crew, these modern vessels are constructed to world-wide transporting dry bulk cargoes of all types.

FORESTRY PRODUCTS
Although motor vehicles constitute NOSAC's main cargo type, the sophisticated design of the vessels in this fleet has allowed diversification. As a result NOSAC now transports some 600,000 cubic metres of timber and pulp per year, under multi-year contracts.

SHIPPING SERVICES
NORWEGIAN SHIP MANAGEMENT has 40 vessels of various types under management. In addition to this supply crew, vessel survey and consultancy services on technical project work of all kinds, H.M. AARGAARD is an international broker of bunkering services to owners world-wide.

CORPORATE STRUCTURE
With our head office in Oslo and nine offices outside Norway, we can assist with practical problem-solving right where the help is needed. We are a dynamic organisation which attracts highly motivated personnel with excellent qualifications.

Norwegian American Line - NAL

The privatised utilities have reported sharp profit rises. Robert Peston says this success could backfire

Flattering figures

Company results this week have thrown up an interesting conundrum. While businesses of every shape and size have been reporting sharp profit rises, the regional electricity companies, in particular, have produced sparkling figures, up to 35 per cent better than the profits they forecast when they came to the market last autumn.

But they deliberately make a low forecast, or have they simply performed much better than expected?

The financial performance is not, sadly, testimony to the power of privatisation to transform dull bureaucrats into entrepreneurial company directors. In fact, it is proof of the ability of dull bureaucrats to outwit the government in the run-up to a share sale.

Before any nationalised industry is privatised, there is a ritual row between the industry's managers and the government department sponsoring the sale. The government wants to maximise privatisation proceeds, by injecting as much debt as possible into the companies and pricing the shares as high as possible. However, the managers have exactly the opposite aim. The less debt they take and the lower the flotation price, the better the share price performance will be after privatisation — enhancing their reputations, enhancing their pay, and enhancing the value of share options.

Strivings in the officers' messes, gatherings of retired colonels, remonstrations in the letters columns of The Times and the Daily Telegraph across Britain there is the sound of regimental silver rattling.

An announcement on which army battalions are condemned to merger or oblivion is due in about a fortnight. In the month since the planned size of the army was set — amounting to 104,000 trained soldiers, a reduction of a quarter — speculation has been preying on morale.

A rearguard action is still being fought. Whitehall to stop the fantasy being cut as low as 98 battalions from the current 55. This would be five fewer than senior officers reckoned on last year, and there is deep discontent in the army about whether it will now have sufficient strength to meet all tasks placed upon it. The armoured corps, dominated by traditional cavalry regiments, is expected to come down from 18 to 12 battalions, including one for training. A regiment can have any number of battalions; most have just one.

Resentment about the loss of UK regimental identities will be the sterner as the new structure is expected to make room for the

The share price and debt injections all depend on the level of profits the companies are forecast to make. If forecasts are high, then flotation proceeds will be high.

As with other privatisations, the electricity companies had a better row with the Treasury and the Department of Energy over the level of profits they could be expected to earn. Last summer, the chairman of at least one regional company threatened to resign over the quantity of debt the government was threatening to put into his company, because he claimed profits were unlikely to be enough to cope with it.

"It was all part of the bargaining process," commented one official resignedly. The profit forecasts have subsequently been shown to be far too low.

If the electricity forecast had been more accurate, the government might have been able to raise an extra £1bn — or that is what Mr Frank Dobson, the Labour party's energy spokesman, argues. "They spent more on advice from City firms than Lloyd's insurance market has lost and they still could not get the forecasts right," he says.

The House of Commons Public Accounts Committee, which scrutinises state asset sales, may investigate such claims. So senior Whitehall officials are anxious to point out that they never trusted the forecasts.

retention of two of Britain's Nepalese Gurkha battalions. Political lobbying is intense. "There will be the devil to pay if anything should be done with them," Sir James Spicer, Conservative MP and former major, said in defence of the Devon and Dorset Regiment this week.

A Save Our Scottish Battalions campaign has been launched, reminiscent of the one which saved the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders from extinction in 1968.

Supporters of the Royal Welch Fusiliers, one of the few "line" regiments (standard infantry, not guards) to have got this far without being amalgamated, went to parliament this week with a 90,000-name petition and a regimental goat. They are appalled at rumours of an impending merger with the Cheshire Regiment, whose recruiting area is next door to their own main stamping-ground of north Wales: "Totally impracticable," according to Major Tim Herbert (Rtd), regimental secretary. The Cheshires also spared in earlier re-organisations, are not happy about it either.

The Royal Welch, now stationed in Berlin, accept that a merger with the other Welsh line regiment, the Royal Regiment of Wales, would work better. But they argue that the principality would then be under-represented. Welsh regiments, they say, have never had problems keeping up to strength.

The British army has been through this before: in 1881, when infantry regiments were paired off, in 1922, and over a period between 1958 and 1971, the titles have changed or have disappeared. What happened, for instance to the Buffs (as in Sir Francis Doyle's rhyme, "Last night among his fellow rowers/He jested quaffed and swore/A drunken private of the Buffs...")? Once the 3rd Regiment of Foot, going back to Charles II, they are now, after two amalgamations, subsumed in the Queen's Regiment, along with nine others.

Customs — the piping of the bagpipes, the eating of the leek, the trooping of the swede (you had better ask a member of the Royal Hampshire to explain that) — and idiosyncrasies in dress are as jealously held to as battle honours.

Army heretics come in 10 different colours. The Royal Welch wear a "dash" of black ribbons at the back of the collar because they were the last regiment to wear pig tails. The Gloucestershire Regiment has a badge at the back of the cap to commemorate an mothbored manoeuvre in Alexandria in 1801. The 18th/6th The Queen's Royal Lancers, a cavalry regiment, wear their cross-straps the wrong way round.

It is a tribal system in which almost all manage to consider themselves superior. A corporal in the Royal Scots, the senior line regiment dating from 1633, took offence at the tag "filth" which the media applied to Iraq's Republican Guards. "They won't feel so bloody dirty," he said, "when they meet the Royal Jocks".

County designations for regiments were a late Victorian invention, but regional recruiting bases have come to play a big part in

Electricity companies

	Pre-tax profits (£ million)
	1991 (forecast)	1991 (actual)
Eastern	112.4	131.0
East Midlands	88.9	119.1
London	115.8	142.0
Midland	91.9	110.0
Northern	73.1	89.2
Norweb	63.2	70.3
Seaboard	60.5	81.4
Southern	122.7	140.0
South Western	44.9	66.2
Yorkshire	115.6	135.0

When they priced the shares, they did it on the basis that profits could turn out to be about 10 per cent higher — though they could not predict the full extent of the disparity.

Nonetheless, there is a limit to the government's ability to control the forecasts, these officials say. They rely on the goodwill of companies for the supply of accurate financial information, which forms the basis of the forecasts. And in the end, if a company and the government disagree about a forecast, the company's directors cannot be coerced — pressure from the sponsoring department has its limits.

Nor are the electricity companies a special case. Mr Ian Byatt, director-general of Ofwat, the water industry regulator, said earlier this week that profits of the 10 water companies in their first year after privatisation were £23m higher than the government had expected.

So how do the companies explain the disparities? The pre-tax profits of Seaboard, the southern electricity company, were 35 per cent higher than forecast, its chairman, Mr George Squair, gives three main reasons. The cost of buying electricity from the central market, or pool, was lower than expected, because the high oil price was not sustained when hostilities opened in the Gulf. Winter was unexpectedly cold, so demand for power was greater than estimated. And the cash generated by these increased sales led to a reduction in the interest rate. But the underlying profit increase for some regional companies may have been even greater than the reported rise, according to financial analysts. To avoid an even bigger embarrassment, some regional companies may have made additional provisions to cover the future costs of reorganisations

Water companies

	Pre-tax profits (£ million)
	1990	1991
Anglian	139.0	153.0
Northumbrian	54.8	46.9
North West	177.0	215.0
Severn Trent	217.0	249.0
Southern	84.1	97.1
South West	82.8	88.2
Thames	187.0	212.0
Welsh	97.0	128.0
Wessex	56.5	66.0
Yorkshire	105.3	114.1

Adjusted for balance-sheet changes

Regiments set to fall out

David White charts an intense rearguard campaign regimental loyalties. Local areas of Scotland, Wales, the north, Midlands, south and south-west of England are represented by vulnerable single-battalion regiments, and it is there that feelings about impending changes run highest.

However, that is not all there is to the army. There are also regiments of two or more battalions. The Royal Regiment of Artillery has other regiments inside it. But like transport, signals, engineering and other arms, organised in larger corps, it does its recruiting on a national basis.

Infantry and cavalry together make up less than 40 per cent of army manpower. Gunners and engineers have no particular regional link, and carry no colours. Their ethos is different, but appears to work equally well. The Parachute Regiment, now with three battalions, also recruits country-wide, commanding a different kind of loyalty from other infantry units.

The regimental structure has its army critics. They say it is outdated, snobbish, inflexible and inappropriate in an age when soldiers train to go into battle not in self-contained battalions but in battle groups — mixes of infantry, armour, artillery and support arms. The idea of establishing instead a single "corps of infantry" has been discussed but, at least for now, rejected. "I don't think we could recruit a corps of infantry," commented one senior officer.

It may be different from the way the US or German armies function, but not unlike. In Europe both the French and Danes have similar regimental attachments.

The case put forward for the regiment is that it is good for cohesion and recruitment. It is home to its members. The battalion of 650 men is a school-size unit. It fosters initiative. Sons often follow fathers into the same regiment. For officers, taking command of one's own battalion as a lieutenant-colonel is often seen as the pinnacle of an army career. The system is flexible enough, if that post is taken, to make it possible, if a little tricky, to go to command another.

The biggest problem with the system is just what is happening now: it defies anyone seeking to cut it back. Perhaps it is that armies, anyway, tend to resist change. But for all the emotions, there is nothing from the past to suggest that new regimental names command less loyalty than old ones. As one infantry captain said: "Any soldier at the end of the day will just turn to the right and carry on."

The jaws are working hard these days, but the upper lips are as stiff as ever.

LETTERS

No volte face on access by BT competitors to exchange lines

From Mr David Harrington.

Sir, The Lex Column took a side-swipe (July 4) at what it called Sir Bryan Carsberg's volte face in deciding to apply common sense to the rules under which BT's competitors will pay to access its exchange lines.

Far from executing a volte face, OFTEL has once more demonstrated an approach and flexibility which telecommunications consumers find so refreshing, but which is so often absent elsewhere. In this case, Sir Bryan Carsberg has listened to our proposals for a realistic extension of competition down to the all-important area of lines into the home and office, and has made a response which, in the long run, will benefit everybody.

His decision to tilt the Retaining competition among marketmakers

From Mr A Neil Ryder.

Sir, You must be right ("Monopoly on the exchange", July 3) to warn that competitive market-making should not be abandoned lightly, especially after years of listening to the London Stock Exchange extolling the virtues of its system against the specialist system of the New York exchange. However, nor should we retain a system which is so clearly failing both issuers and investors.

Since Big Bang, companies have found the market for their shares becoming increasingly "opaque"; instead of a small number of jobbers who knew exactly what was happening in the market for the shares they traded, large companies now face a dozen or more marketmakers, none of which approaches an overall view, while small companies can find themselves with no effective market at all. Investors suffer equally — if not more.

Your editorial advocates close regulation to ensure that monopoly marketmakers do not make indecent profits, but why not argue for the retention of some elements of competition?

Surely the exchange could determine the number of marketmakers who will be allowed to trade every stock by reference to the volume of trade. This would allow equal treatment of all companies, rather than different systems for large and small companies with the inevitable arguments over those in the middle.

The right to join this privileged group could then be opened to annual competitive tender, under a system which took into account suitability and past record as well as the bid itself.

A system along these lines — as long as it were open to scrutiny — would surely satisfy the OFT as well as both sides of the market.

A Neil Ryder, Sage Partners, Endell Court, 27a Endell Street, London WC2

PO standards of performance

From Sir Bryan Nicholson.

Sir, At the Post Office we monitor and publish our standards of service in a way that "commands respect" exactly as Maurice Healy suggests (Personal View, July 3).

Since 1988 our letter service performance has been independently measured, to a system supported by our watchdog body, the Post Office Users' National Council.

We don't set the standards. We agree year-on-year improvement targets with POUNC — targets which we have beaten every year.

Bryan Nicholson, chairman and chief executive, The Post Office, 30 St James's Square, London SW1

Languages as a plank in an election platform

From Mr John Adams.

Sir, Paddy Ashdown, the Liberal Democrat leader, speaks fluent French, Mandarin and Dialects, and has a smattering of German and several of the less well-known south-east Asian dialects. This contrasts with other political leaders and possibly accounts for his rather more enlightened attitudes to foreign affairs. He is very enthusiastic about the learning of languages and I am hoping that the party will be prepared to make foreign language training an important plank in its next election platform.

If it did it would be a first in British politics, and would reflect a past failure that might account for Britain's relative lack of success in exports. Foreign language training could be stressed as a relation to industry and education, and it is to be hoped that any party promising progress in these areas would not "chicken out" at the last minute as did the present government with a national curriculum which is rather weak in foreign languages.

It would have to recognise that French, while important and the most commonly taught language, will not serve for all purposes. It should provide incentives (including financial ones), and/or encourage industry to do so, for people to learn a language.

Barclays Bank recently made fun of British industry's shortcomings in this area. I fear this attitude is widespread. It would be courageous but correct for the Liberal Democrats to try to make an important contribution to our export effort. As it is the most European (and international) of our parties, I would expect it to do so.

John Adams, chairman, Yorks Regional Society of Institute of Linguists, 5 Victoria Road, Lightcliffe, Halifax HX3 8DF

Fax service

LETTERS may be faxed on 01-272 5638. They should be clearly typed and not handwritten. Please set the machine for one revolution.

BANK OF CREDIT AND COMMERCE INTERNATIONAL SA

INFORMATION FOR DEPOSITORS

It was announced on Friday, 5 July, that the Luxembourg authorities have taken control of the assets of Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (BCCI SA), a Luxembourg-incorporated bank with a number of branches in the United Kingdom. The Bank of England has taken parallel action in this country to safeguard the assets of BCCI SA. The effect of these actions is to freeze deposits with BCCI SA, including those at branches in the United Kingdom.

Although BCCI SA is not incorporated in the United Kingdom, once a winding-up order has been made (which may take about a month), those who have placed deposits in sterling with branches of BCCI SA in the United Kingdom may apply for compensation from the Deposit Protection Fund. The Deposit Protection Board will obtain details of all such deposits from the liquidator of BCCI SA and will be writing to sterling depositors inviting them to claim. Depositors may if they wish approach the Board for information. The address and telephone numbers are given below.

The Deposit Protection Fund provides for compensation equal to 75% of an eligible deposit, with a maximum payout to any one depositor of £15,000. So, a person with a qualifying deposit of £10,000 would receive £7,500; a person with one of £20,000 would receive £15,000; but anyone with more than £20,000 would still receive only £15,000.

There are certain exclusions from this protection. These include deposits held by people or institutions who are connected with the management or ownership of the bank; other banks authorised in the UK; secured deposits or deposits with an original term of more than five years; deposits securing overdrafts or loans; and deposits payable in any currency other than sterling.

Deposits placed with other parts of the group, outside the United Kingdom, will not be eligible for compensation from the Deposit Protection Fund; but these may benefit from Deposit Protection Schemes in other jurisdictions. Deposits placed in the Isle of Man branch are similarly excluded from the UK compensation arrangements.

Payments made to depositors by the Deposit Protection Fund will represent a claim of the Fund on any assets that may later be available to the liquidator to repay the original depositor. So, if funds became available to the liquidator to pay depositors, the Deposit Protection Fund would get its money back first.

Once a winding-up order has been made, the Board will obviously move as quickly as possible to issue forms and process claims. It is not possible at this stage to be certain how long this will take; but the Board will certainly be anxious to act speedily to alleviate any hardship and uncertainty.

Depositors seeking assistance or clarification should in the first instance approach:

The Deposit Protection Board,
Bank of England,
Threadneedle Street,
London EC2R 8AH.
Telephone numbers 071 601-3368/5394/3749/6204

Bank of England — London
5 July 1991

Siemens outlook brighter as new orders surge 18%

By Andrew Fisher in Paris

SIEMENS, the German electrical and electronics group, said yesterday its prospects had improved in the last six months. It now hopes for a slight increase in net income for the year ending September 1991.

Mr. Kariheinz Kaske, chief executive, said yesterday new orders booked in the first eight months of 1990-91 rose by 18 per cent to DM54.3bn ($29.6bn). Turnover was 11 per cent higher at DM44.5bn.

Activities added last year, mainly those of Nixdorf Computer and Plessey of the UK, accounted for 7 percentage points of the business growth. Expansion in east Germany had also swelled the order inflow which should total nearly DM60bn for the full year, against the DM77bn forecast earlier.

In 1991-92, orders should expand further to around DM65bn, with turnover up to around DM70bn in 1990-91. This will represent a 25 per cent growth in business volume over two years, Mr Kaske said.

He stressed, however, that

Siemens' results were still being burdened by the integration of loss-making Nixdorf and high development costs in semiconductors, a sector in which it had just announced a joint production venture with IBM of the US. The agreement with IBM would boost Siemens' efforts to bring down costs of memory chip production.

The co-operation with IBM on 16-megabit chips would also help strengthen the European electrical and electronics industry. Nor would the contract with IBM prevent Siemens from working with another partner - SGS-Thomson, the Italian-French concern, has vainly tried to link up with Siemens and Philips of the Netherlands once the production co-operation at IBM's French plant was under way.

The group has already reported Nixdorf losses of DM300m in the first half of this year, though total Siemens net profits rose by 8 per cent to DM730m.

Mr Karl-Hermann Baumann, finance director, said Nixdorf's losses would be lower in the second half. Mr Kaske said his more optimistic view of profits for 1990-91 reflected a surge of new telecommunications, energy, and railway orders.

The higher dollar and the end of the Gulf war had also brightened the outlook.

He said: "If conditions in the capital and currency markets do not deteriorate again, we may even be able to report an increase, although slight."

Last year, net profits rose by 8 per cent to DM730m. Mr Baumann said Nixdorf's losses would lead to a drop in Siemens' operating profits this year, but this would be offset by earnings on the group's large holdings of securities.

A stronger earnings trend, in line with the rising in orders, would depend on progress at Nixdorf and in semiconductors. Start-up costs of new German operations would also affect profits by more than DM100m this year. Earnings per share would be similar to last year's DM42.

The returns on turnover were expected to slip from 2.5 per cent to 2.4 per cent, though Mr Baumann noted that Siemens' profits on securities were not dependent on turnover performance.

Probe into Deutsche Bank deals intensifies

By Katharine Campbell in Frankfurt

THE PROBE into the securities department of Deutsche Bank deepened yesterday as the insider commission of the Frankfurt Stock Exchange revealed it had accumulated sufficient evidence in preliminary enquiries to proceed with a formal investigation.

Germany's leading bank had earlier this week said its own internal inquiry had turned up no breach of insider rules. While the commission did not name the parties it was investigating, Deutsche Bank last night revealed the probe was focusing on Mr Barthold von Ribbentrop, the stock exchange department chief, Mr Klaus Nagel, equity trading head, and Mr Manfred Mertens, former head of the equity warrants department.

On Monday, the bank dismissed Mr Mertens claiming, however, it had done so because he had disobeyed house rules unconnected with his activities in the stock exchange department.

At the time it sought to clear the name of three other senior officials, adding that "there has been no question of a breach of insider rules".

The bank said it had no new information, but that it would continue to support fully the commission's enquiries.

Mr Friedrich-Carl von Megede, the retired judge heading the stock exchange commission, said that while the case was first picked up because of "questionable allegations" in an anonymous letter, the commission now had its own evidence to warrant suspicions that "trader and customer adviser rules" had been breached.

The commission said it was focusing on "transactions in advance of buy or sell recommendations of equity warrants".

The City of Frankfurt public prosecutor also this week began investigating a number of Deutsche Bank officials concerning possible tax evasion.

Last wave crashes over remnants of Bond's empire

By Mark Westfield in Sydney and Ray Bashford in London

Mr Alan Bond's main personal investment vehicle, Dailhold Investments, was placed in provisional liquidation yesterday, signalling the end of the line for the once high-flying Australian businessman.

A federal court in Sydney appointed a provisional liquidator after being told Dailhold had total debts "well in excess" of A$1bn (US$700m), offset by assets of just A$41m. The assets consisted mainly of artworks, including 61 early Australian paintings valued at A$5.5m and a Renoir valued at A$3.5m, plus some property.

Mr Alan Bond, who started as a property developer in and around his adopted home city of Perth, Western Australia, in the early 1970s, expanded through aggressive borrowing to become the head of one of Australia's top 20 companies before the October 1987 share market crash.

Bond Corporation became a big investor in international property, television, natural resources, and brewing. Like most of Bond Corp's investments acquired during the 1986 and 1987 bull market, the foray cost the group heavily. The group debt rose dramatically during a four-year buying spree, to an estimated US$10bn.

Mr Bond's victory in the America's Cup in 1985 bought him his name to international attention. The win attracted intense adulation in Australia, where he was lauded by Mr Bob Hawke, the prime minister, as an entrepreneurial hero.

His public displays of private wealth were famous, and his lifestyle became spiced with personal aircraft, yachts and country estates. He developed a taste for expensive art and, in December 1988, became the owner of "Rise", a 700-tonne, 120-metre-long ship, by Vincent Van Gogh after arranging a loan for part of the US$42m auction price.

Mr Bond made his first big international expansion through the purchase of G. Heileman, the US brewer in September 1987, for US$1.3bn. At the same time, he was liquidating ating a policy of expansion in the UK which included the acquisition of shareholdings in Allied Lyons, the diversified food and drink group, Lomax, the international conglomerate, TV-am; M&G, Britain's biggest mail trust company; and Alshup Industries.

The purchase of a 20 per cent holding in Lomax, which is headed by Mr Roland "Tiny" Rowland, is seen by many close watchers of the Bond group as a turning in the group's history. The preparation of several reports by Lomax, with a damning conclusion that the group was "technically insolvent", helped undermine international and domestic investor confidence.

Mr Bond was forced to dispose of the Lomax stake at a loss as part of a general asset disposal programme.

Last March, he was removed on bail until September to face charges of dishonesty. He is also facing investigations on several other issues.

In court yesterday, Dailhold's 54 per cent holding in Bond Corporation was listed at A$1.5m in a fire sale or A$5.5m in an orderly sale.

Counsel for former Bond Corp subsidiary J.N. Taylor, which sought appointment of a liquidator, supported by finance company Mercantile Credit, described Dailhold as being "manifestly insolvent".

J.N. Taylor is owed A$10m by Dailhold, and Mercantile Credit A$971,000. The appointment of a provisional liquidator comes shortly after Dailhold's main syndicate banks, which are owed US$350m, seized the company's 72 per cent shareholding in its main cash-flow operation, the Greenvale nickel mill in Queensland.

The provisional liquidator's main task will be to enforce Mr Alan Bond's personal guarantee over the syndicate's loans to Dailhold. The syndicate consists of Bank of New Zealand, Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and Tricontinental, the collapsed Australian merchant bank.

Alan Bond: his public displays of wealth were famous Credit sought the appointment of a provisional liquidator on the grounds that Dailhold directors had been realising assets to the detriment of some lenders to the group.

They were referring mainly to the granting to the National Australia Bank - owed A$12.5m - of a charge over various artworks.

In an affidavit to the court, Mr Michael Cross, Dailhold's managing director, confirmed that the group held assets of just A$41m and undisputed liabilities of "well in excess of A$1bn".

Mr Cross's affidavit said that the Queensland joint venture could be worth as little as US$200m if Dailhold had to seek a buyer. This compares with the A$1.3bn peak valuation of Dailhold's share in the nickel project three years ago.

Bond Corporation hit its nadir in 1990 when it announced accumulated losses of A$2.25bn, revised later to A$1.6bn following the sale of its main operating business, the Swan, Castlemaine and Tochuys breweries to former associate Bell Resources and New Zealand brewer Lion Nathan.

Following a series of meetings by shareholders and creditors, Bond Corp has approved for a complex scheme of arrangement which will convert unsecured creditors owed A$1.1bn into controlling shareholders in the group, with equity holders emerging with 10 per cent of the reconstructed company.

Dailhold will emerge with about 5 per cent of the alluded-down group. The scheme still requires the approval of the courts and the Australian Stock Exchange before the securities can be re-listed.

Omni opts to sell all its assets

By William Dullforce in Geneva

OMNI HOLDING, the parent company for the crumbling industrial and financial empire of Mr Werner Rey, has opted for liquidation and the sale of all its assets. A settlement will be proposed to creditors at a meeting in Berne on September 10.

S.G. Warburg's representative office in Geneva has been given the mandate to sell Omni's largest remaining asset, a 30 per cent stake in Sulzer, the big Swiss engineering group.

Omni has been under court protection from its creditors since April 3. Protection has just been extended by two months until October 2.

Under an agreement between Sulzer and Coopers & Lybrand, Basle, the court-appointed administrator for Omni, the Sulzer stake will be sold in two lots, of 20 per cent and 10 per cent.

Sulzer itself has agreed to buy 10 per cent at a guaranteed price of Sfr5,000 per share, if no other buyer is found according to Omni. This week the price has fluctuated around Sfr4,800 on the Swiss stock exchange.

Mr Jürg Neck, Omni's spokesman, said Warburg had been mandated to find "first name industrial buyers".

Sulzer, whose statutes allow it to limit strictly the number of shares it will register for any one shareholder, has undertaken either to register all the shares sold or to buy them itself at the price offered by the outside company, Mr Neck said.

A price of Sfr4,800 a share would raise the 30 per cent Omni/Rey stake at about Sfr580m ($250m).

In April, a Berne civil court judge estimated Omni's debts at roughly Sfr7.7bn. Since then Omni has sold a majority interest in Adia, the employment and services group, for Sfr940m.

However it had to buy 100,000 of the 700,000 shares involved from former Adia executives. As part of the deal, Omni paid off a Sfr712m debt to Adia.

Italy to launch bonds futures

THE ITALIAN treasury plans to launch its own futures market for government bonds by the middle of next year, AP-UP reports from Milan.

The treasury said it was preparing the institutional, regulatory and regulatory structures for a securities-based futures trading system together with the Bank of Italy and the stock market regulatory agency Consob.

De Havilland to reduce its workforce by 7%

DE HAVILLAND, the Canadian aircraft manufacturer whose future ownership is up in the air, is laying off 700 employees in its Montreal plant and has warned of further retrenchments to come, writes Bernard Simon in Toronto.

The Toronto-based company said the lay-offs were the result of a slower order intake over the past year, and were not related to the controversial consortium bid by a European consortium comprising Aerospaciale of France and Alenia. De Havilland is currently a division of the US aircraft-maker Boeing.

The Canadian government recently blocked the French-Brazil proposal on the grounds that it failed to provide a "net benefit" to Canada. Alenia and Aerospaciale have until July 30 to come up with an alternative offer. Investment Canada, the government foreign investment review agency, declined to say whether the European consortium had yet submitted a revised proposal.

Aerospaciale and Alenia earlier warned that even if their bid was successful, workers at De Havilland would probably have to make sacrifices to ensure the company's viability. The first round of lay-offs affects 350 workers involved in the production of the Dash 8 aircraft. The production rate is being scaled back from 5 to 4 aircraft a month.

WEEKLY PRICE CHANGES	Latest prices	Change on week	Year on year	High 1991	Low 1991
Gold per troy oz	$370.25	+0.85	181.25	$362.25	$353.55
Silver per troy oz	$280.55	+4.0	275.40	$280.55	$253.55
Aluminium 99.7% (cash)	$1328	+2.5	$1336	$1370	$1227
Copper Grade A (cash)	$1468.25	+8.5	$1524	$1472	$1241.0
Lead (cash)	$245	+0.5	$251	$252.5	$229.5
Nickel (cash)	$8975	+522.5	$8920	$8225.5	$8110
Zinc SHG (cash)	$1073	+7	$1147	$1430	$1059
Tin (cash)	$8965	+30	$9015	$8915	$7970
Cocoa Futures (Sep)	$2608	+12	$2788	$2714	$2586
Coffee Futures (Sep)	$158	+5	$285	$2813	$2520
Sugar (LDP Futures)	$254	nc	$232	$254	$194
Barley Futures (Nov)	$113.75	nc	$112.50	$121.50	$117.75
Wheat Futures (Nov)	$1715.0	-0.30	$1715.00	$141.10	$1711.80
Cotton Futures (Nov)	$82.00	-1.3	$2.70	$82.00	$1700
Oil (Brent Blend)	$37.0	-0.25	$1.25	$35.25	$12.75

London Markets

SPOT MARKETS
Crude oil (per barrel FOB)
Dubai $15.95-5.30 +275
Brent Blend (diesel) $15.85-8.80 +0.25
Brent Blend (Aug) $15.80-8.80 -0.25
W.T.I. (1 pm set) $20.85-0.90

Oil products
(NBP prompt delivery per tonne CIF) + or - Premium Gasoline $30.42
Gas Oil $17.79
Heavy Fuel Oil $5.67
Naphtha $15.18
Petroleum Argon Estimate $22.54

Other + or -
Gold (per troy oz) $370.25 +0.70
Silver (per troy oz) $280.55 +4.0
Platinum (per troy oz) $897.5 +7.5
Palladium (per troy oz) $897.5 +7.5
Aluminium (per tonne) $1328 +2.5
Copper (US Producer) $1468.25 +8.5
Lead (US Producer) $245 +0.5
Nickel (five month) $8975 +522.5
Tin (Kuala Lumpur market) $8965 +30
Zinc (US Prime Western) $1073 -0.25

Cattle (live weight) 108.30p +0.84p
Sheep (head weight) 130.40p 10.13p
Pigs (live weight) 66.10p -0.40p

London daily sugar (raw) $264.0
London daily sugar (white) $251.0 +0.3
Tate and Lyle export sugar $264.0 +4.0

Barley (English feed) $110.25c
Wheat (US No 3 yellow) $1715.00c
Wheat (US Dark Northern) $1715.00c

Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Aug) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Sep) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Oct) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Nov) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Dec) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jan) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Feb) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Mar) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Apr) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (May) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jun) $1.75p -0.50p
Rubber (Jul) $1.

هكذا من الأصل

- Mr Mike Smith has been appointed an assistant director of NICHOLSON CHAMBERLAIN COOKE AVIATION.
- Mr Ron Finlay has been appointed to the board of FISHBURN REDGES. He was a director of Valin Pollen.
- Mr Michael Charles Weston, chief executive officer of WOODGATE FARMS DAIRY, Uckfield, has been appointed a director.
- Mr Alan Thompson has been appointed finance director of THE EUROPEAN. He was finance director of The Sunday Correspondent.
- The FAIRFAY GROUP has appointed Mr P.V. Boughton as company secretary. Mr A.G. Hayward has resigned as director and company secretary.
- LEHMAN BROTHERS GIFTS, part of Lehman Brothers International, has appointed Mr Daniel McCarthy as a director, and a senior dealer for UK gifts from August 1. He was investment manager of sterling bonds at Abber National.

● Current Unit Trust prices are available on FT Cityline. Calls charged at 45p per minute peak and 34p off peak, inc VAT. To obtain your free Unit Trust Code Booklet ring (071) 925-2128.

Lot	Cust.	Sold	Offer + or -	Yield
Class	Price	Price	Price	to %

Birmingham Progressive Mgmt Co Ltd200F		London SW1A 1TW		071-4938181
35 St James Place	1989	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00
1990	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	42.00
1991	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	47.00
1992	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	52.00
1993	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	57.00
1994	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	62.00
1995	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	67.00
1996	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	72.00
1997	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	77.00
1998	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	82.00
1999	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	87.00
2000	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	92.00
2001	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	97.00
2002	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	102.00
2003	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	107.00
2004	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	112.00
2005	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	117.00
2006	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	122.00
2007	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	127.00
2008	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	132.00
2009	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	137.00
2010	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	142.00
2011	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	147.00
2012	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	152.00
2013	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	157.00
2014	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	162.00
2015	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	167.00
2016	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	172.00
2017	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	177.00
2018	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	182.00
2019	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	187.00
2020	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	192.00
2021	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	197.00
2022	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	202.00
2023	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	207.00
2024	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	212.00
2025	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	217.00
2026	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	222.00
2027	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	227.00
2028	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	232.00
2029	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	237.00
2030	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	242.00
2031	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	247.00
2032	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	252.00
2033	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	257.00
2034	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	262.00
2035	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	267.00
2036	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	272.00
2037	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	277.00
2038	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	282.00
2039	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	287.00
2040	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	292.00
2041	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	297.00
2042	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	302.00
2043	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	307.00
2044	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	312.00
2045	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	317.00
2046	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	322.00
2047	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	327.00
2048	25.00	28.00	32.00	37.00	332.00
2049	25

		12/31/97		12/31/96		12/31/95		12/31/94		12/31/93		12/31/92		12/31/91		12/31/90		12/31/89		12/31/88		12/31/87		12/31/86		12/31/85		12/31/84		12/31/83		12/31/82		12/31/81		12/31/80		12/31/79		12/31/78		12/31/77		12/31/76		12/31/75		12/31/74		12/31/73		12/31/72		12/31/71		12/31/70		12/31/69		12/31/68		12/31/67		12/31/66		12/31/65		12/31/64		12/31/63		12/31/62		12/31/61		12/31/60		12/31/59		12/31/58		12/31/57		12/31/56		12/31/55		12/31/54		12/31/53		12/31/52		12/31/51		12/31/50		12/31/49		12/31/48		12/31/47		12/31/46		12/31/45		12/31/44		12/31/43		12/31/42		12/31/41		12/31/40		12/31/39		12/31/38		12/31/37		12/31/36		12/31/35		12/31/34		12/31/33		12/31/32		12/31/31		12/31/30		12/31/29		12/31/28		12/31/27		12/31/26		12/31/25		12/31/24		12/31/23		12/31/22		12/31/21		12/31/20		12/31/19		12/31/18		12/31/17		12/31/16		12/31/15		12/31/14		12/31/13		12/31/12		12/31/11		12/31/10		12/31/09		12/31/08		12/31/07		12/31/06		12/31/05		12/31/04		12/31/03		12/31/02		12/31/01		12/31/00		12/31/99		12/31/98		12/31/97		12/31/96		12/31/95		12/31/94		12/31/93		12/31/92		12/31/91		12/31/90		12/31/89		12/31/88		12/31/87		12/31/86		12/31/85		12/31/84		12/31/83		12/31/82		12/31/81		12/31/80		12/31/79		12/31/78		12/31/77		12/31/76		12/31/75		12/31/74		12/31/73		12/31/72		12/31/71		12/31/70		12/31/69		12/31/68
--	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	----------	--	--

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

Individual Fund Manager		Assets Under Management		Funds Managed
Year	Assets Under Management	Year	Assets Under Management	Funds Managed	Funds Managed
1993	$1,000,000	1993	$1,000,000	1993	1993
1994	$1,000,000	1994	$1,000,000	1994	1994
1995	$1,000,000	1995	$1,000,000	1995	1995
1996	$1,000,000	1996	$1,000,000	1996	1996
1997	$1,000,000	1997	$1,000,000	1997	1997
1998	$1,000,000	1998	$1,000,000	1998	1998
1999	$1,000,000	1999	$1,000,000	1999	1999
2000	$1,000,000	2000	$1,000,000	2000	2000
2001	$1,000,000	2001	$1,000,000	2001	2001
2002	$1,000,000	2002	$1,000,000	2002	2002
2003	$1,000,000	2003	$1,000,000	2003	2003
2004	$1,000,000	2004	$1,000,000	2004	2004
2005	$1,000,000	2005	$1,000,000	2005	2005
2006	$1,000,000	2006	$1,000,000	2006	2006
2007	$1,000,000	2007	$1,000,000	2007	2007
2008	$1,000,000	2008	$1,000,000	2008	2008
2009	$1,000,000	2009	$1,000,000	2009	2009
2010	$1,000,000	2010	$1,000,000	2010	2010
2011	$1,000,000	2011	$1,000,000	2011	2011
2012	$1,000,000	2012	$1,000,000	2012	2012
2013	$1,000,000	2013	$1,000,000	2013	2013
2014	$1,000,000	2014	$1,000,000	2014	2014
2015	$1,000,000	2015	$1,000,000	2015	2015
2016	$1,000,000	2016	$1,000,000	2016	2016
2017	$1,000,000	2017	$1,000,000	2017	2017
2018	$1,000,000	2018	$1,000,000	2018	2018
2019	$1,000,000	2019	$1,000,000	2019	2019
2020	$1,000,000	2020	$1,000,000	2020	2020
2021	$1,000,000	2021	$1,000,000	2021	2021
2022	$1,000,000	2022	$1,000,000	2022	2022
2023	$1,000,000	2023	$1,000,000	2023	2023
2024	$1,000,000	2024	$1,000,000	2024	2024
2025	$1,000,000	2025	$1,000,000	2025	2025
2026	$1,000,000	2026	$1,000,000	2026	2026
2027	$1,000,000	2027	$1,000,000	2027	2027
2028	$1,000,000	2028	$1,000,000	2028	2028
2029	$1,000,000	2029	$1,000,000	2029	2029
2030	$1,000,000	2030	$1,000,000	2030	2030
2031	$1,000,000	2031	$1,000,000	2031	2031
2032	$1,000,000	2032	$1,000,000	2032	2032
2033	$1,000,000	2033	$1,000,000	2033	2033
2034	$1,000,000	2034	$1,000,000	2034	2034
2035	$1,000,000	2035	$1,000,000	2035	2035
2036	$1,000,000	2036	$1,000,000	2036	2036
2037	$1,000,000	2037	$1,000,000	2037	2037
2038	$1,000,000	2038	$1,000,000	2038	2038
2039	$1,000,000	2039	$1,000,000	2039	2039
2040	$1,000,000	2040	$1,000,000	2040	2040
2041	$1,000,000	2041	$1,000,000	2041	2041
2042	$1,000,000	2042	$1,000,000	2042	2042
2043	$1,000,000	2043	$1,000,000	2043	2043
2044	$1,000,000	2044	$1,000,000	2044	2044
2045	$1,000,000	2045	$1,000,000	2045	2045
2046	$1,000,000	2046	$1,000,000	2046	2046
2047	$1,000,000	2047	$1,000,000	2047	2047
2048	$1,000,000	2048	$1,000,000	2048	2048
2049	$1,000,000	2049	$1,000,000	2049	2049
2050	$1,000,000	2050	$1,000,000	2050	2050
2051	$1,000,000	2051	$1,000,000	2051	2051
2052	$1,000,000	2052	$1,000,000	2052	2052
2053	$1,000,000	2053	$1,000,000	2053	2053
2054	$1,000,000	2054	$1,000,000	2054	2054
2055	$1,000,000	2055	$1,000,000	2055	2055
2056	$1,000,000	2056	$1,000,000	2056	2056
2057	$1,000,000	2057	$1,000,000	2057	2057
2058	$1,000,000	2058	$1,000,000	2058	2058
2059	$1,000,000	2059	$1,000,000	2059	2059
2060	$1,000,000	2060	$1,000,000	2060	2060
2061	$1,000,000	2061	$1,000,000	2061	2061
2062	$1,000,000	2062	$1,000,000	2062	2062
2063	$1,000,000	2063	$1,000,000	2063	2063
2064	$1,000,000	2064	$1,000,000	2064	2064
2065	$1,000,000	2065	$1,000,000	2065	2065
2066	$1,000,000	2066	$1,000,000	2066	2066
2067	$1,000,000	2067	$1,000,000	2067	2067
2068	$1,000,000	2068	$1,000,000	2068	2068
2069	$1,000,000	2069	$1,000,000	2069	2069
2070	$1,000,000	2070	$1,000,000	2070	2070
2071	$1,000,000	2071	$1,000,000	2071	2071
2072	$1,000,000	2072	$1,000,000	2072	2072
2073	$1,000,000	2073	$1,000,000	2073	2073
2074	$1,000,000	2074	$1,000,000	2074	2074
2075	$1,000,000	2075	$1,000,000	2075	2075
2076	$1,000,000	2076	$1,000,000	2076	2076
2077	$1,000,000	2077	$1,000,000	2077	2077
2078	$1,000,000	2078	$1,000,000	2078	2078
2079	$1,000,000	2079	$1,000,000	2079	2079
2080	$1,000,000	2080	$1,000,000	2080	2080
2081	$1,000,000	2081	$1,000,000	2081	2081
2082	$1,000,000	2082	$1,000,000	2082	2082
2083	$1,000,000	2083	$1,000,000	2083	2083
2084	$1,000,000	2084	$1,000,000	2084	2084
2085	$1,000,000	2085	$1,000,000	2085	2085
2086	$1,000,000	2086	$1,000,000	2086	2086
2087	$1,000,000	2087	$1,000,000	2087	2087
2088	$1,000,000	2088	$1,000,000	2088	2088
2089	$1,000,000	2089	$1,000,000	2089	2089
2090	$1,000,000	2090	$1,000,000	2090	2090
2091	$1,000,000	2091	$1,000,000	2091	2091
2092	$1,000,000	2092	$1,000,000	2092	2092
2093	$1,000,000	2093	$1,000,000	2093	2093
2094	$1,000,000	2094	$1,000,000	2094	2094
2095	$1,000,000	2095	$1,000,000	2095	2095
2096	$1,000,000	2096	$1,000,000	2096	2096
2097	$1,000,000	2097	$1,000,000	2097	2097
2098	$1,000,000	2098	$1,000,000	2098	2098
2099	$1,000,000	2099	$1,000,000	2099	2099
2100	$1,000,000	2100	$1,000,000	2100	2100

[illegible]

ENTIRE CATALOG: Contact us for the only HISTORIC PRINTING: The best of American

[illegible]

For Western Life Use To — 67700 Use To — 67700 Use To — 67700

Salisbury Unit, Wm. Ltd (LH007)				Widener Unit, S. London WLA01
Reliance House, Tisbury, Wm.	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003	Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003
St Paul's Life	0974 51003	256 5346 78 68	256 5346 78 68	Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003
Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	256 5346 78 68	256 5346 78 68	Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003
Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	256 5346 78 68	256 5346 78 68	Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003
Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	256 5346 78 68	256 5346 78 68	Widener House, S. London	0974 51003	0974 51003	0974 51003
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd (09055)				Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd (G0007)
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000	Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000	Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000	Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000	Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000
Rich Asset Mgmt (Intl Trust) Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000	Sovereign Unit, Tel. Mgmt Ltd	09055 10000	09055 10000	09055 10000
Fund Management (00007)				Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd (06229)
Fund Management (00007)	00007 10000	00007 10000	00007 10000	Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd	06229 10000	06229 10000	06229 10000
Fund Management (00007)	00007 10000	00007 10000	00007 10000	Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd	06229 10000	06229 10000	06229 10000
Fund Management (00007)	00007 10000	00007 10000	00007 10000	Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd	06229 10000	06229 10000	06229 10000
Fund Management (00007)	00007 10000	00007 10000	00007 10000	Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd	06229 10000	06229 10000	06229 10000
Fund Management (00007)	00007 10000	00007 10000	00007 10000	Standard Life Tel Mgmt Ltd	06229 10000	06229 10000	06229 10000

Current Unit Trust prices are available on FT Cityline. Calls charged at 45p per minute peak and 34p off peak. VAT. To obtain free Unit Trust Booklet, call (071) 925-2128.

Continued on next page

● Current Unit Trust prices are available on FT Cityline. Calls charged at 45p per minute ex VAT and 24p off peak inc VAT. To obtain your free Unit Trust Code Booklet ring (071) 925-128.

٥٠
باص

هكذا عني الأصل

[illegible]

WORLD STOCK MARKETS

US MARKETS (3:00 pm)

July 5

DOW JONES

3000

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

US MARKETS (3:00 pm)

July 5

DOW JONES

3000

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

US MARKETS (3:00 pm)

July 5

DOW JONES

3000

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

US MARKETS (3:00 pm)

July 5

DOW JONES

3000

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

100

AMERICA

Wall Street

Volume

Daily (million)

Date	Volume (million)
June 20	180
June 21	190
June 22	140
June 23	160
June 24	170
June 25	120
June 26	150
June 27	160
June 28	170
June 29	160
June 30	150
July 1	140
July 2	130
July 3	140
July 4	130

Average daily volume: 157,000,000

704 to 514.

The headline figure on the morning's employment report for June appeared to be bad news for stocks - non-farm payroll jobs were 134,000

EUROPE

THE WEEK ended quietly for most bourses yesterday, with only Paris showing a significant index movement, settles Our Markets Staff.

PARIS enjoyed a gentle rebound, which gathered pace in the afternoon as Wall Street opened higher. The rally was technical after the weakness, although it was by of an imminent cut in interest rates in the UK, which could trigger a hike in the dollar.

THE CAC 40 index recovered from a day's low of 1,997.08 to close 15.09 or 0.9 per cent higher at 1,723.14, but lost 1.4 per cent on the week. Turnover was similar to or less than Thursday's FF2,026m.

THE of this week has been at the mercy of international markets, and alternating fears and hopes on interest rates, which have given it a volatile time.

Bargain-hunting lifted most blue chips yesterday, with Elf and Elf Agip up 1.25 and 1.25, on volume of 354,300 shares. Alcatel Alsthom FFrs at FF166.68, Peugeot FFrs at FF166 and LVMH FFrs at FF165.

Stocks regarded as oversold showed larger gains. Ax Min. the insurer, rose FFrs 1.25 to FF165.50, and Thomson CSF, the defence electronics group, gained FFrs 30 or 47 per cent to FF137.50.

Canal Plus, the television channel, fell FFrs 1,91.018 in active trading of 97,050 shares, which included a block of 72,000 at FF1,015.50 each.

FRANKFURT closed midweek 1.90 higher at 688.33 in midsession, flat on the week, and the DAX 2.90 better at 1,618.91, 0.2 per cent lower over five days. Volume was in to be light after Thursday's DM65.9m.

THE of the bourse market fell again, but Allianz helped balance the financial sector with a rise of DM51 to DM2,228 after a five-day fall of DM153. Analysts said it was showing a technical recovery, but leading the market down last week.

Mannesmann went ex dividend and fell a pnt DM3.20 to DM270 in the London post-bourse. Mr John Loughpost of James Capel said that short-term prospects were threatened by uncertainty about the company's cellular telephone system - Mannesmann has 51 per cent of the backing consortium - and by the prospect of lower order inflows and sales in engineering and steel trades.

Siemens rose another DM6.50 to DM275.50, but the analyst said that 1981 profits would be flat, but yesterday it believed that $6,000 and the unemployment rate rose to 7 per cent — but a closer look at the numbers showed some encouraging signs of an economic recovery. Analysts highlighted June gains in the work week, overtime hours and average hourly earnings as evidence of expanding economic activity.

Among individual banks, BankAmerica was actively traded, rising 1/4 to 3/4% in response to a $1-billion bid for The San Francisco-based banking group's stock fell earlier in the week on concern that it would join three smaller Californian banks in announcing that problem loan provisions had hit second quarter profits. However, BankAmerica's move likely will be a sign to reassure investors that its earnings would come in as forecast.

around $37M. In the same sector, South Bancorp. Banking, plunged 1/2 to $1% in active trading after it agreed to sell 18 of its offices in North Florida, along with all assets and deposits, to AmSouth Bancorp. AmSouth slipped 3/4 to $28 1/2.

One of the day's biggest risers was Lewis Galoob Toys, which jumped 1 1/2 to $5 1/2 after the company said that it had signed a deal with Mattel, the maker of American Girl, to sell Lewis Galoob's new line of toys.

On the market, Biogen climbed 3/4 to $27 1/2. Investors bought the stock after the company said that it expected to report a 50 per cent increase in net income and a rise of about 20 per cent in revenues for the second

In contrast, a profits warning hit Lasertechnics, which fell 15% after the company said it would post a loss for the second three months of 1991.

Canada

TORONTO stocks were stuck within a narrow four-point range in listless midday trade. Weakness in US INDUSTRIALS INDEX by the low turnover, kept the TSX in check. The composite index rose 1.8 to 3,497.2. MINING led declines by 168 to 181 on turnover of 1.5 million shares.

The gold SECTOR was active. Placer Dome rose 1.2% to C$16. American Barrick firmed C$4 to C$12. Corona shares gained C$4 to C$11 and Echo Bay eased C$11.

Europe stays at the top of fund managers' list

Jacqueline Moore on institutional investment plans

EUROPE remains firmly at the top of managers' equity shopping lists, 51% of the respondents in the survey outperformed all other regions in the first half. The US is too expensive and Japan too risky, they say - but they do not intend to neglect them entirely for the rest of 1991.

Standard Life is staying light in the US and Japan, but heavy in Europe. Mr Dick Barfield, chief investment manager, explains: "The US looks expensive historically, while the pick-up in corporate earnings that should come in the next 12 months looks pretty fully discounted." However, he will be watching the UK closely in the next quarter, but whether he should raise his weighting there.

about 33 per cent at the end of last year. Interest rate falls may be postponed, but they are more likely in Europe than elsewhere.

But others believe Europe may have peaked. Fidelity says that it is cautious on Europe for the short term, because most corporate results fore-look seem optimistic. It is concentrating on defensive stocks.

Ms Virginia Feilden at Thornton Investment Management, which picks companies rather than markets, expects to put less into Europe now because of the recent strength. "We would reduce about the cost of reunification have confused the picture.

"The biggest question mark in Europe is over Germany," says Mr Erich Stock, responsible for Europe at Shearson Lehman Global Asset Management. Nevertheless, he retains a significant presence in the German market, saying: "We will maintain a strong, neutral, weighing there, because it is so difficult to translate the likely cost of reunification into [corporate earnings] numbers."

France is also puzzling the fund managers. "The French funds bought French equities in the first half in anticipation of an interest rate cut which failed

Japan also looks unattractive, says Mr Barfield, because prospects for corporate earnings are not exciting and the stock market is under strain against bonds. However, he adds: "If short-term interest rates were to come down, that could change the outlook."

Source: Datastream

where would the money come from to make the market rise further? Standard Life, however, remains overweight in French equities, as does Spain, against bonds.

Spain continues to enjoy fairly wide support, although many fund managers have taken profits after its strength this year. "The last quarter has been exciting for Spain, with a lot of new issues, acquisitions and mergers in banks," says Ms Massoumeh Khadjenouri of Shearson. "We have now lightened up, because Spain did so well. We're still overweight, but have reduced our percentage of Spanish equities. Funds invested in Spain] to 8 per cent from about 12 per cent a couple of months ago."

The Japanese market has few supporters. Mr Nitin Mehta, responsible for international strategy at Shearson Lehman Global Asset Management, points out that Japanese monetary policy remains tight, in spite of the country's discount rate cut.

Some fund managers believe that Tokyo's underperformance may be coming to an end. "It is more attractive than it was," says Mr Nicholas Marx.

Lazard, similarly, is reducing its overweight stance in Europe, says Ms Maxwell-Arnot: "The markets have run

Standard Life has taken similar action, remaining underweight on Spain but reducing its holdings. Lazard Investors is more cautious and is slightly underweight. Mr Dino Fuschillo, responsible for Spain, explains that there is no economic pick-up yet, and anticipates disappointing first-half well-Arnot, who heads the European Unit at Lazard Freres. "I believe that it is right to look there now. We remain neutral, but increasing." Fidelity, which takes a company-by-company approach, says that it already has a fair amount of investment in Japan, mainly in Europe, some attract widespread support, while others only nervousness. Germany's popularity has faded its strength in the second quarter.

Higher inflation, a potential rise in interest rates, plans for a withholding tax on investment income, and

Overall, fund managers are continuing to shop mainly in Europe, but they are being selective - and many are tempted to try out a few new stocks again.

ASIA PACIFIC

Weak futures pull Nikkei below 23,000

Tokyo

A SHARP fall in futures towards the close pulled prices down yesterday. The Nikkei average closed below the 3,000 support level for the first time since January 18, writes Smith Terzono in Tokyo.

The Index rose in the morning to a session high of 3,041.50 on a short-term interest rate that fell to 287.27 on the day's low and down 1.7 percent on the week, as dealers liquidated positions before the weekend.

Volume fell from 370m to 340m shares. Institutions, expected to buy on a fall below 3,000, failed to participate. Topix gained by 694 to 216 and 180 unchanged. The Topix index of all first-section stocks fell 13.75 to 1,783.23 and, in London, the ISE/Nikkei 50 fell 2.04 to 1,362.90.

Sentiment deteriorated on reports that the ministry of Finance had confirmed that Nomura Securities and Nikko Securities had received loans to a gangster group through Nomura Securities.

Gold fell 1.71 and Nikko issue of the day, fell ¥10 to ¥1,150. The company denied newspaper reports that it had requested compensation from brokers. Tokyu, the railway company, named in the reports, fell ¥10 to ¥1,010.

Japan Aviation Electronics Industry, an electronics company affiliated to NEC, plunged by 10 daily limit to ¥200 to ¥100 on reports that it had upgraded US missiles to Iran. NEC fell ¥30 to ¥1,460.

Nippon Telegraph and Telephone fell ¥28,000 to ¥851,000 following Thursday's rally on the government's order to reduce on foreign sales of the shares.

International Industries lost 10 on foreign buying.

Industrial gained ¥20 to ¥1,670, and Sony ¥50 to ¥6,350.

Trust banks, which had fallen on rumours that they had compensated clients for losses on fund investments, recovered. Mitsubishi Trust & Banking added ¥20 to ¥1,090.

Construction issues rose on the government's approval of ¥200bn spending on infrastructure.

ture projects. Kajima rose Tk to Tk14,800.

In Osaka, the OSE average fell 143.69 to 25,544.84 on volume of 24.4m shares.

Roundup

PACIFIC RIM ~~market~~ were moved by domestic matters.

HONG KONG closed at a 1991 high but well off the post-1989 crash. HSI fell 4.91 to 3,914.50 on heavy trading. Turnover crashed from HK$2.65bn to HK$3.38bn, the ~~lowest~~ since May 1989. The Hang Seng index rose 42.00 to 3,822.71, up 0.1 per cent on the week.

AUSTRALIA was lifted by a smaller-than-expected current account deficit for May, and hopes of a cut in interest rates. Volume rose to 1,576.7m from 1,517.2m. The AI ~~dropped~~ 0.18 to 1,576.7m. ASX rose 12.3 to 1,537.21, up 1.9 per cent on the week.

MANILA was disappointed by Ayala Land's ~~loss~~. The stock closed at 26.50 pesos, just below the offer price of 28 pesos. The market was unsettled by the resignation of President Fernando Aquino's son as chief of staff.

The composite index fell 0.18 to 1,008.91, up 0.1 per cent on the week.

TAIWAN gained nearly 80 points in the first 10 minutes to a high of 5,687, on reports that the central bank would lower the discount rate. But a weak banking sector dragged the weighted index down 15.36 to 5,652.41, or 0.27 per cent lower on the week.

SEOUL ~~recovered~~ after a record ~~loss~~ on reports that ~~South~~ construction companies, rumoured to be in financial difficulties, might be given government aid. The composite index rose 11.21 to 614.69, 2.9 per cent on the week.

JAKARTA's index fell 1.07 to 341.78 on the two-for-one scrip issue ~~and~~ the feed producer, Indo, Japfa Jat 5,500 rupiah, ~~and~~ the exchange gave 127, prompting calls for exchange to adjust the index for scrip issues.

BOMBAY was lifted by pharmaceutical shares on hopes that price controls on drugs might be lifted. The BSE index rose 58.66 to 1,357.32.

SINGAPORE'S Straits Times index closed gained 0.51 to 1,478.58, down 0.9 per cent on the week.

SOUTH AFRICA

JOHANNESBURG's all-share index rose 42 to a record high of 3,430 on bullish sentiment and a lack of scrip. The all-gold index added 28 to 1,469 and the industrial index advanced 20 to 3,884. De Beers rose R4.50 to R88.

LONDON SHARE SERVICE

[illegible]FT-ACTUARIES WORLD INDICES

Jointly compiled by The Financial Times Limited, Goldman, Sachs & Co., and County NatWest
Markets in conjunction with the Institute of Actuaries and the Faculty of Actuaries

NATIONAL AND REGIONAL MARKETS	THURSDAY JULY 8 1991										WEDNESDAY JULY 7 1991										DOLLAR INDEX
	US Dollar Index	Day's Change %	Round Trading Index	Yen Index	DM Index	Local Currency	Local to US on day	Div. Yield	Dollar Index	Starting Index	Yen Index	DM Index	Local Currency	1991 Index	1991 Low	1991 High	(approx)
Figures in parentheses show number of lines of stock
Australia (70)	140.99	+0.5	139.24	128.97	134.51	122.84	-0.5		141.74	130.83	124.98			147.30	112.74		260.74
Austria (28)	128.91	+0.1	128.27	128.91	128.91	128.91	-0.1	1.87	170.12	150.12	150.12			228.87	167.89		250.74
Belgium (15)	128.91	+0.5	114.46		118.21	115.35	-0.3	5.11		110.83	109.83	118.60			121.75	151	151.74
Canada (115)	138.69	+0.3	126.11		132.30	114.74	+0.3	3.38	138.28	127.74			114.40		128.49		261.74
Denmark (37)	238.27	+0.1	218.25	207.75	224.00	227.76	-0.2	1.55	201.57	219.38	209.58	239.09	229.16	270.56	217.74		267.47
Finland (16)	91.94	+2.2	94.39	90.85	87.72	84.74	+2.7	2.05	100.00	83.13			86.69	81.50	125.15	100.00
France (114)	100.00	+0.1	111.41	111.41	115.05	117.77	-0.1	1.31	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00
Germany (65)	102.74	+0.1	90.35		88.01		+0.3	2.28	102.61	94.78			97.70	97.70	125.35	102.03
Hong Kong (55)	180.22	+1.4	119.18		159.76	+1.4	4.85	158.99	145.94			150.44	150.44	167.77	119.82
Ireland (18)	141.03	+0.1	130.28	124.01	134.55	138.25	+0.3	3.75	140.98	130.11	124.21	134.12	137.89	182.46	138.78		186.55
Italy (77)	70.94	-0.4	85.16	82.02	87.29	71.95	-0.1	3.25	72.82	85.42	82.45	87.43	72.00	88.23	70.54		204.61
Japan (64)	125.77	+0.1	118.16	110.98	120.00		+0.1	2.85	125.77	112.14			112.14	112.14	118.25	118.25
Malaysia (31)	100.00	+0.1	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	+0.1	2.85	228.44	211.01	201.43	217.51	245.68		192.23	234.51
Mexico (16)	1025.28	+0.4	947.08	901.50	878.13	3980.32	+0.4	1.01	1021.63	943.71	900.87		1336.30	1073.72	684.45
Netherlands (58)	128.69	-0.1	114.21	128.92	122.42	+0.1	1.29	129.98		114.82	123.77		123.77	145.73	126.70	141.16
New Zealand (13)	47.78	-0.8	44.13		47.72	-0.3	7.84		44.39	42.38			44.39	54.64	41.18
Norway (32)	184.59	+0.1	170.48	182.28	170.17	170.17	-1.3	1.64	184.71	170.62			170.62		237.04
Spain (38)	168.53	-1.0	174.15	163.77			+0.3	1.81	180.82		180.82	181.41	156.48	208.25		202.46
Singapore (35)	223.39	+0.3	216.39		222.65		+0.3	232.08	214.94	205.18	221.56	168.70	236.48	170.78	170.05
South Africa (56)	142.88	+0.5	131.98		136.31	124.53	+0.8	1.42	142.13		125.33			171.12	131.51
Sweden (25)	183.84	-0.5					-0.1	184.76	170.57			180.79	204.12	146.80
Switzerland (58)	87.36	+0.4	80.70	76.82		85.74	+0.4	1.21	87.36	85.41			85.41	100.87	82.17
United Kingdom (240)	158.28	-0.8	145.19	150.87	148.19		+0.1	1.51	158.94	144.57	142.27		142.27	180.12	146.86	180.12
USA (526)	151.06	+0.0		132.82	144.11	151.05	+0.0	3.20	151.05	138.53			151.05	158.24	125.95	144.91
Europe (838)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
Nordic (11)	178.35	+0.1				164.08	+0.4	3.97	177.39	164.08			164.08	200.81	155.55
Pacific Basin (719)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
North America (624)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
Europe Ex. UK (588)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
North America (624)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
Europe Ex. UK (588)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
Pacific Ex. Japan (244)	140.75	+0.1	130.02		134.29	128.91	+0.1	1.87	140.75	130.02			130.02	167.89	121.75	151.74
World Ex. US (1748)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
World Ex. Japan (1877)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
World Ex. So. Af. (2213)	135.22	-0.3	124.91	118.91	129.02		-0.3	2.64	135.60	125.26			125.26	124.14	148.66		147.41
World Ex. Japan (1877)	127.89	+0.3	117.78	112.11	121.84	120.08	+0.4	3.97	127.14	117.44	112.11	121.06	119.39	151.52
The World Index (2200)	125.50	+0.3	125.50	124.97	129.03	128.07	+0.3	2.65	125.85	120.14	123.73	126.50	145.01				147.50

YOU ARE RIGHT

You should not have to struggle to gather European company intelligence.

FT Analysis offers two page reports of vital knowledge, updated every day, on all the major companies in 18 European countries. Reports are presented in a clear and consistent way across Europe and include:

- description of business activities (including main products and subsidiaries)
- five year summary of financial statements
- major shareholders and directors
- share price history
- latest announcements

The FT Analysis service also gives you access to press cuttings from all major international business publications. And allows you to search Europe for business opportunities or keep tabs on the latest moves of your European counterparts.

Stop struggling and call:

Paul Fomin on (071) 702 0991

FT ANALYSIS

THE ANALYSIS CORPORATION PLC
IREX HOUSE, 42 - 47 MINORIES LONDON EC3N 1DY

A Financial Times Group Company

Latest Share Prices are available on FT Cityline. To obtain your free Share Code Booklet ring the FT Cityline help desk on 071-925-2128

LONDON SHARE SERVICE

AMERICANS
1991	Stock	Price	Div	Yield	1991	Stock	Price	Div	Yield
100	Alcoa Inc.	100.00	1.00	1.00%	100	Johnson & Johnson	100.00	1.00	1.00%
101	Amgen Inc.	101.00	1.01	1.01%	101	Johnson & Johnson	101.00	1.01	1.01%
102	Amgen Inc.	102.00	1.02	1.02%	102	Johnson & Johnson	102.00	1.02	1.02%
103	Amgen Inc.	103.00	1.03	1.03%	103	Johnson & Johnson	103.00	1.03	1.03%
104	Amgen Inc.	104.00	1.04	1.04%	104	Johnson & Johnson	104.00	1.04	1.04%
105	Amgen Inc.	105.00	1.05	1.05%	105	Johnson & Johnson	105.00	1.05	1.05%
106	Amgen Inc.	106.00	1.06	1.06%	106	Johnson & Johnson	106.00	1.06	1.06%
107	Amgen Inc.	107.00	1.07	1.07%	107	Johnson & Johnson	107.00	1.07	1.07%
108	Amgen Inc.	108.00	1.08	1.08%	108	Johnson & Johnson	108.00	1.08	1.08%
109	Amgen Inc.	109.00	1.09	1.09%	109	Johnson & Johnson	109.00	1.09	1.09%
110	Amgen Inc.	110.00	1.10	1.10%	110	Johnson & Johnson	110.00	1.10	1.10%
111	Amgen Inc.	111.00	1.11	1.11%	111	Johnson & Johnson	111.00	1.11	1.11%
112	Amgen Inc.	112.00	1.12	1.12%	112	Johnson & Johnson	112.00	1.12	1.12%
113	Amgen Inc.	113.00	1.13	1.13%	113	Johnson & Johnson	113.00	1.13	1.13%
114	Amgen Inc.	114.00	1.14	1.14%	114	Johnson & Johnson	114.00	1.14	1.14%
115	Amgen Inc.	115.00	1.15	1.15%	115	Johnson & Johnson	115.00	1.15	1.15%
116	Amgen Inc.	116.00	1.16	1.16%	116	Johnson & Johnson	116.00	1.16	1.16%
117	Amgen Inc.	117.00	1.17	1.17%	117	Johnson & Johnson	117.00	1.17	1.17%
118	Amgen Inc.	118.00	1.18	1.18%	118	Johnson & Johnson	118.00	1.18	1.18%
119	Amgen Inc.	119.00	1.19	1.19%	119	Johnson & Johnson	119.00	1.19	1.19%
120	Amgen Inc.	120.00	1.20	1.20%	120	Johnson & Johnson	120.00	1.20	1.20%
121	Amgen Inc.	121.00	1.21	1.21%	121	Johnson & Johnson	121.00	1.21	1.21%
122	Amgen Inc.	122.00	1.22	1.22%	122	Johnson & Johnson	122.00	1.22	1.22%
123	Amgen Inc.	123.00	1.23	1.23%	123	Johnson & Johnson	123.00	1.23	1.23%
124	Amgen Inc.	124.00	1.24	1.24%	124	Johnson & Johnson	124.00	1.24	1.24%
125	Amgen Inc.	125.00	1.25	1.25%	125	Johnson & Johnson	125.00	1.25	1.25%
126	Amgen Inc.	126.00	1.26	1.26%	126	Johnson & Johnson	126.00	1.26	1.26%
127	Amgen Inc.	127.00	1.27	1.27%	127	Johnson & Johnson	127.00	1.27	1.27%
128	Amgen Inc.	128.00	1.28	1.28%	128	Johnson & Johnson	128.00	1.28	1.28%
129	Amgen Inc.	129.00	1.29	1.29%	129	Johnson & Johnson	129.00	1.29	1.29%
130	Amgen Inc.	130.00	1.30	1.30%	130	Johnson & Johnson	130.00	1.30	1.30%
131	Amgen Inc.	131.00	1.31	1.31%	131	Johnson & Johnson	131.00	1.31	1.31%
132	Amgen Inc.	132.00	1.32	1.32%	132	Johnson & Johnson	132.00	1.32	1.32%
133	Amgen Inc.	133.00	1.33	1.33%	133	Johnson & Johnson	133.00	1.33	1.33%
134	Amgen Inc.	134.00	1.34	1.34%	134	Johnson & Johnson	134.00	1.34	1.34%
135	Amgen Inc.	135.00	1.35	1.35%	135	Johnson & Johnson	135.00	1.35	1.35%
136	Amgen Inc.	136.00	1.36	1.36%	136	Johnson & Johnson	136.00	1.36	1.36%
137	Amgen Inc.	137.00	1.37	1.37%	137	Johnson & Johnson	137.00	1.37	1.37%
138	Amgen Inc.	138.00	1.38	1.38%	138	Johnson & Johnson	138.00	1.38	1.38%
139	Amgen Inc.	139.00	1.39	1.39%	139	Johnson & Johnson	139.00	1.39	1.39%
140	Amgen Inc.	140.00	1.40	1.40%	140	Johnson & Johnson	140.00	1.40	1.40%
141	Amgen Inc.	141.00	1.41	1.41%	141	Johnson & Johnson	141.00	1.41	1.41%
142	Amgen Inc.	142.00	1.42	1.42%	142	Johnson & Johnson	142.00	1.42	1.42%
143	Amgen Inc.	143.00	1.43	1.43%	143	Johnson & Johnson	143.00	1.43	1.43%
144	Amgen Inc.	144.00	1.44	1.44%	144	Johnson & Johnson	144.00	1.44	1.44%
145	Amgen Inc.	145.00	1.45	1.45%	145	Johnson & Johnson	145.00	1.45	1.45%
146	Amgen Inc.	146.00	1.46	1.46%	146	Johnson & Johnson	146.00	1.46	1.46%
147	Amgen Inc.	147.00	1.47	1.47%	147	Johnson & Johnson	147.00	1.47	1.47%
148	Amgen Inc.	148.00	1.48	1.48%	148	Johnson & Johnson	148.00	1.48	1.48%
149	Amgen Inc.	149.00	1.49	1.49%	149	Johnson & Johnson	149.00	1.49	1.49%
150	Amgen Inc.	150.00	1.50	1.50%	150	Johnson & Johnson	150.00	1.50	1.50%
151	Amgen Inc.	151.00	1.51	1.51%	151	Johnson & Johnson	151.00	1.51	1.51%
152	Amgen Inc.	152.00	1.52	1.52%	152	Johnson & Johnson	152.00	1.52	1.52%
153	Amgen Inc.	153.00	1.53	1.53%	153	Johnson & Johnson	153.00	1.53	1.53%
154	Amgen Inc.	154.00	1.54	1.54%	154	Johnson & Johnson	154.00	1.54	1.54%
155	Amgen Inc.	155.00	1.55	1.55%	155	Johnson & Johnson	155.00	1.55	1.55%
156	Amgen Inc.	156.00	1.56	1.56%	156	Johnson & Johnson	156.00	1.56	1.56%
157	Amgen Inc.	157.00	1.57	1.57%	157	Johnson & Johnson	157.00	1.57	1.57%
158	Amgen Inc.	158.00	1.58	1.58%	158	Johnson & Johnson	158.00	1.58	1.58%
159	Amgen Inc.	159.00	1.59	1.59%	159	Johnson & Johnson	159.00	1.59	1.59%
160	Amgen Inc.	160.00	1.60	1.60%	160	Johnson & Johnson	160.00	1.60	1.60%
161	Amgen Inc.	161.00	1.61	1.61%	161	Johnson & Johnson	161.00	1.61	1.61%
162	Amgen Inc.	162.00	1.62	1.62%	162	Johnson & Johnson	162.00	1.62	1.62%
163	Amgen Inc.	163.00	1.63	1.63%	163	Johnson & Johnson	163.00	1.63	1.63%
164	Amgen Inc.	164.00	1.64	1.64%	164	Johnson & Johnson	164.00	1.64	1.64%
165	Amgen Inc.	165.00	1.65	1.65%	165	Johnson & Johnson	165.00	1.65	1.65%
166	Amgen Inc.	166.00	1.66	1.66%	166	Johnson & Johnson	166.00	1.66	1.66%
167	Amgen Inc.	167.00	1.67	1.67%	167	Johnson & Johnson	167.00	1.67	1.67%
168	Amgen Inc.	168.00	1.68	1.68%	168	Johnson & Johnson	168.00	1.68	1.68%
169	Amgen Inc.	169.00	1.69	1.69%	169	Johnson & Johnson	169.00	1.69	1.69%
170	Amgen Inc.	170.00	1.70	1.70%	170	Johnson & Johnson	170.00	1.70	1.70%
171	Amgen Inc.	171.00	1.71	1.71%	171	Johnson & Johnson	171.00	1.71	1.71%
172	Amgen Inc.	172.00	1.72	1.72%	172	Johnson & Johnson	172.00	1.72	1.72%
173	Amgen Inc.	173.00	1.73	1.73%	173	Johnson & Johnson	173.00	1.73	1.73%
174	Amgen Inc.	174.00	1.74	1.74%	174	Johnson & Johnson	174.00	1.74	1.74%
175	Amgen Inc.	175.00	1.75	1.75%	175	Johnson & Johnson	175.00	1.75	1.75%
176	Amgen Inc.	176.00	1.76	1.76%	176	Johnson & Johnson	176.00	1.76	1.76%
177	Amgen Inc.	177.00	1.77	1.77%	177	Johnson & Johnson	177.00	1.77	1.77%
178	Amgen Inc.	178.00	1.78	1.78%	178	Johnson & Johnson	178.00	1.78	1.78%
179	Amgen Inc.	179.00	1.79	1.79%	179	Johnson & Johnson	179.00	1.79	1.79%
180	Amgen Inc.	180.00	1.80	1.80%	180	Johnson & Johnson	180.00	1.80	1.80%
181	Amgen Inc.	181.00	1.81	1.81%	181	Johnson & Johnson	181.00	1.81	1.81%
182	Amgen Inc.	182.00	1.82	1.82%	182	Johnson & Johnson	182.00	1.82	1.82%
183	Amgen Inc.	183.00	1.83	1.83%	183	Johnson & Johnson	183.00	1.83	1.83%
184	Amgen Inc.	184.00	1.84	1.84%	184	Johnson & Johnson	184.00	1.84	1.84%
185	Amgen Inc.	185.00	1.85	1.85%	185	Johnson & Johnson	185.00	1.85	1.85%
186	Amgen Inc.	186.00	1.86	1.86%	186	Johnson & Johnson	186.00	1.86	1.86%
187	Amgen Inc.	187.00	1.87	1.87%	187	Johnson & Johnson	187.00	1.87	1.87%
188	Amgen Inc.	188.00	1.88	1.88%	188	Johnson & Johnson	188.00	1.88	1.88%
189	Amgen Inc.	189.00	1.89	1.89%	189	Johnson & Johnson	189.00	1.89	1.89%
190	Amgen Inc.	190.00	1.90	1.90%	190	Johnson & Johnson	190.00	1.90	1.90%
191	Amgen Inc.	191.00	1.91	1.91%	191	Johnson & Johnson	191.00	1.91	1.91%
192	Amgen Inc.	192.00	1.92	1.92%	192	Johnson & Johnson	192.00	1.92	1.92%
193	Amgen Inc.	193.00	1.93	1.93%	193	Johnson & Johnson	193.00	1.93	1.93%
194	Amgen Inc.	194.00	1.94	1.94%	194	Johnson & Johnson	194.00	1.94	1.94%
195	Amgen Inc.	195.00	1.95	1.95%	195	Johnson & Johnson	195.00	1.95	1.95%
196	Amgen Inc.	196.00	1.96	1.96%	196	Johnson & Johnson	196.00	1.96	1.96%
197	Amgen Inc.	197.00	1.97	1.97%	197	Johnson & Johnson	197.00	1.97	1.97%
198	Amgen Inc.	198.00	1.98	1.98%	198	Johnson & Johnson	198.00	1.98	1.98%
199	Amgen Inc.	199.00	1.99	1.99%	199	Johnson & Johnson	199.00	1.99	1.99%
200	Amgen Inc.	200.00	2.00	2.00%	200	Johnson & Johnson	200.00	2.00	2.00%

مكتبة الكتب

MINES—Contd

	Price	%
Shenandoah 11	35	15
Shenandoah 22	35	15
Shenandoah 33	35	15
Shenandoah 44	35	15
Shenandoah 55	35	15
Shenandoah 66	35	15
Shenandoah 77	35	15
Shenandoah 88	35	15
Shenandoah 99	35	15
Shenandoah 100	35	15
Shenandoah 101	35	15
Shenandoah 102	35	15
Shenandoah 103	35	15
Shenandoah 104	35	15
Shenandoah 105	35	15
Shenandoah 106	35	15
Shenandoah 107	35	15
Shenandoah 108	35	15
Shenandoah 109	35	15
Shenandoah 110	35	15
Shenandoah 111	35	15
Shenandoah 112	35	15
Shenandoah 113	35	15
Shenandoah 114	35	15
Shenandoah 115	35	15
Shenandoah 116	35	15
Shenandoah 117	35	15
Shenandoah 118	35	15
Shenandoah 119	35	15
Shenandoah 120	35	15
Shenandoah 121	35	15
Shenandoah 122	35	15
Shenandoah 123	35	15
Shenandoah 124	35	15
Shenandoah 125	35	15
Shenandoah 126	35	15
Shenandoah 127	35	15
Shenandoah 128	35	15
Shenandoah 129	35	15
Shenandoah 130	35	15
Shenandoah 131	35	15
Shenandoah 132	35	15
Shenandoah 133	35	15
Shenandoah 134	35	15
Shenandoah 135	35	15
Shenandoah 136	35	15
Shenandoah 137	35	15
Shenandoah 138	35	15
Shenandoah 139	35	15
Shenandoah 140	35	15
Shenandoah 141	35	15
Shenandoah 142	35	15
Shenandoah 143	35	15
Shenandoah 144	35	15
Shenandoah 145	35	15
Shenandoah 146	35	15
Shenandoah 147	35	15
Shenandoah 148	35	15
Shenandoah 149	35	15
Shenandoah 150	35	15
Shenandoah 151	35	15
Shenandoah 152	35	15
Shenandoah 153	35	15
Shenandoah 154	35	15
Shenandoah 155	35	15
Shenandoah 156	35	15
Shenandoah 157	35	15
Shenandoah 158	35	15
Shenandoah 159	35	15
Shenandoah 160	35	15
Shenandoah 161	35	15
Shenandoah 162	35	15
Shenandoah 163	35	15
Shenandoah 164	35	15
Shenandoah 165	35	15
Shenandoah 166	35	15
Shenandoah 167	35	15
Shenandoah 168	35	15
Shenandoah 169	35	15
Shenandoah 170	35	15
Shenandoah 171	35	15
Shenandoah 172	35	15
Shenandoah 173	35	15
Shenandoah 174	35	15
Shenandoah 175	35	15
Shenandoah 176	35	15
Shenandoah 177	35	15
Shenandoah 178	35	15
Shenandoah 179	35	15
Shenandoah 180	35	15
Shenandoah 181	35	15
Shenandoah 182	35	15
Shenandoah 183	35	15
Shenandoah 184	35	15
Shenandoah 185	35	15
Shenandoah 186	35	15
Shenandoah 187	35	15
Shenandoah 188	35	15
Shenandoah 189	35	15
Shenandoah 190	35	15
Shenandoah 191	35	15
Shenandoah 192	35	15
Shenandoah 193	35	15
Shenandoah 194	35	15
Shenandoah 195	35	15
Shenandoah 196	35	15
Shenandoah 197	35	15
Shenandoah 198	35	15
Shenandoah 199	35	15
Shenandoah 200	35	15

Min. Insp.	13	0
ware	13	0
Resources	14	0
gate Expt. CS	62	0
West Expt.	7	0
Quest. Res.	109	+1
Gold Hdg.	175	+2
ta Gold (R 2p.	25	-1
u Mining 20p.	37	0
	100	0

NOTES

Trading classifications are indicated by the following letters: Alpha refers to shares traded by marketmakers and with a normal bid-ask spread; Beta refers to shares based on experience of how many days the stock has been in a deal; Gamma refers to all other shares; Delta refers to all other traded instruments.

Prices are based on intra-day market prices and prices of net dividends are based on the closing price of the day prior to the dividend date.

25p. Estimated price/earnings ratio based on the closing price of the day prior to the dividend date.

... then have been ad
... or returned
... reduced, passed or deferred
... residents on application
... port available
... UK listed; dealings per
... listed on Stock Exchange a ... degree of regulation as
... listed

[illegible]

end and yield based on prospectus for 1990. L Estimated annual yield based on latest annual earnings. P Figures based on prospectus or other official estimate. Y Yield based on prospectus for 1990. P Figures based on prospectus or other official estimate.

AL & IRISH S

640	Heston Hldgs.
79	IRC
1978	United Drug 599%
577
614%
168
+10

ADDITIONAL OPTI

3-month call rates

RHM	46
Zink Org Ord.	7
Bairns	6
Reed Intnl	44
Sears	44
Sci.Kf. Becham	33
Tl	33
TSS	38
Tecno
Trust Emi
Trust Houses

24	T&M
30	Unilever
53	Vickers
56	Wellcome
12
29

33	Pro
45	Brit Land
44	Control Secs
32	Land Securities
50	MEPC

20 Mountain High
48
17 30
62
Active Prelim

19	Brit Petroleum
31	Burmah Castrol
17	Conroy Petrol...
39	Gaelic Res.
88	Premier
22	Shell

36 20 30
13
21
18

27 Loarbo
51 RTZ
38

Write to companies whose stock is listed in the London Stock Exchange for a fee of £3.15 p.a., subject to the Editor's discretion.

BARR
CONSTRUCTION
We aim to expand by Contracting
Telephone: 011 921 251311

FINANCIAL TIMES

Weekend July 6/July 7 1991

Familian
Number 1 in plumbing - Western U.S.A.
WOLSELEY plc
The name behind the name.

EC bans arms sales and aid to Yugoslavia and sends mediators on new mission

Slovenia agrees to talks over borders

By Judy Dempsey in Ljubljana, Laura Silber in Belgrade ■ David Suchan and Ronald van ■ Krol in The Hague

THE THREAT of a Serbian army intervention in Bosnia has been averted for the moment after the rebel republic said it would accept the EC's external borders could be negotiated with the European Community and Yugoslavia's political leaders.

EC foreign ministers meeting in The Hague decided to send ministerial mediators back to Yugoslavia today. They also decided to ban arms sales and suspend aid to Yugoslavia.

There were more violent clashes between ethnic Serbs and Croats in the western republic of Croatia, and skirmishes in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Federal units were positioned in Slavonia, western Croatia, fuelling speculation that the Serbian-dominated army was preparing to defend ethnic Serbs against the Croats in any escalation of violence.

Mr Horvath Hitec, information minister, said the Yugoslav army of reinforcing its troops and asked the federal presidency to curb military activity. He said the Croatian government had asked the presidency to order federal commanders to confine remaining units to barracks.

Mr Horvath Hitec, information minister, said the Yugoslav army of reinforcing its troops and asked the federal presidency to curb military activity. He said the Croatian government had asked the presidency to order federal commanders to confine remaining units to barracks.

monitoring force of between 30 and 50 thousand soldiers to supervise the ceasefire, as requested by the 35-nation CSCE.

The EC made only a veiled reference to the threat that it might recognise Slovenia and Croatia as a means of pressuring Belgrade. Only Denmark gave backing to German efforts to make such a warning explicit.

The final communiqué said that the 12 member countries would reconsider their stance in the event of any further breach of the ceasefire, in particular should military action be taken.

The EC is also sending a that the Serbian government announced that 10,000 of its territorial defence units had returned to barracks. It also said arrangements were being made to return federal army prisoners captured by the rebels.

During last week's heavy fighting in Belgrade, the federal capital, General Marko Negovanic, a member of the federal army's chief of staff, criticised the role played in last week's events by Mr Ante Markovic, the federal prime minister. He is trying to distance himself from the activities of the army and the Ministry of Defence, which is now in accordance with the role of the federal government.

THE LEX COLUMN

Mountleigh in the rescue queue

Shares in Mountleigh are worth a fifth of what they were when Messrs Peltz and May climbed aboard in late 1988. One question investors may care to ponder after yesterday's 590m cash call is whether the company's dynamic rise deserves to be paid commissions for simply taking up their rights. Another is the way in which two sub-underwriters - a Bahamas-based trust owned by the Frizker family of Hyatt hotel and Berkeley fame, and a Danish MEP - not only pick up fees for their trouble but get guaranteed stakes in the company at 25p.

Still, the fact that the issue of the amount to a whopping 9-10 per cent of the proceeds, mainly due to negotiations with the banks - illustrates that there is a price for everything. What shareholders have to decide now is whether they want to assist in an orderly liquidation of Mountleigh's UK property portfolio in the hope that an underfunded Spanish department store will one day come good. There is still no knowing where UK property values will finally sink to, but it is not unfair to assume that gearing can virtually disappear over the next couple of years. After the latest write-downs the UK portfolio should fetch £400m-£450m, which compares with net borrowings of under £550m if the issue is a success.

The doubt is whether Galleas really has the potential which its owners have consistently maintained. Certainly he has provided nothing but disappointment so far, and even triple profits would only provide about 5p of earnings for the greatly enlarged volume of shares. With dividends dependent on Mountleigh's highly unpredictable cash flow, the 8 per cent yield on the theoretical ex-rights price is hardly a surprise. Since the underwriters so clearly want it, perhaps they should have this one to themselves.

FT-SE 100 2,484.7 (+14.3)

Tiphook

Source: Citicorp

for such accounting quirks does not fully justify its current modest multiple of 10 times earnings. With a leasing business, it is a cash flow that counts. The 30 per cent dividend increase suggests Tiphook is now confident it can generate a solid stream of cash through organic growth. The disadvantage is that the company will sooner or later have to start paying tax as capital spending slows. At the same time, gearing should come down from its present level of 300 per cent. But this is a mixed blessing when there is plenty of cash to finance debt. In the medium term, the choice for Tiphook's shareholders is between high debt and high growth.

BCCI

A customer list that included the Panamanian ex-President Manuel Noriega has for a long time been enough to make the international banking community cautious in its dealings with the Bank of Credit and Commerce group. BCCI's borrowings from other banks are correspondingly low, and its closure should not provide any general financial crisis. Compensation to small UK customers looks set to leave a gaping deficit in the UK's deposit insurance scheme, necessitating a fresh levy on banks. On a worse case scenario, this could absorb as much as £500m of collective profits.

The stock market fell the news calmly yesterday. But as they dip in their pockets, bankers might well ask themselves why it took the regulators so long to act: all the more so since the parent bank's Luxembourg regulator now suggests the practices which precipitated the closure had been going on for many years.

Brent Walker

The Brent Walker affair has taken another downward turn, with a series of bank loans once more in jeopardy. It would scarcely be surprising if the self-serving obstinacy of Mr George Walker and the behaviour of his supporters at Tuesday's shareholder meeting had alienated the group's bankers still further. More to the point, the Bank of England seeking to intercede with the Bank of Japan suggests that the weakening of the Japanese banks' capital ratios caused by the latest fall in the Tokyo stock market may already be having its effect on Japanese lending policies.

Tiphook

The stock market has always been reluctant to give Tiphook the benefit of the doubt, largely because it is a highly geared company involved in leasing. Admittedly, the UK recession has ensured a lacklustre performance from its trailer rental business. But its acquisition of Sea Containers has paid off handsomely, the result being a 125 per cent rise in pre-tax profits for the group. This is unlikely to be repeated this year, and in any case may have been somewhat overstated by the decision to write off as much as £130m in goodwill from Sea Containers in the previous account.

Still, Tiphook's predilection

Markets

This week's 70-point recovery in the FT-SE, while strikingly resilient in the circumstances, seems to confirm that the market is locked into a trading range of unusual narrowness and duration. In the past four months the FT-SE has traded within 2.5 per cent either side of 2450. A week ago it threatened to break downward: it is now bang in the middle of the range again.

The dominant impression is of a market hedging its bets on both politics and economics.

GLOBAL EXPERTISE

Fidelity Funds.

The investment range for today's markets.

With heightened volatility in world stockmarkets challenging even the most astute international investor, investment flexibility, choice and first-class fund management expertise are now more important than ever.

That's just what Fidelity Funds offer.

Our global investment range is one of the most comprehensive available and provides investors with unrivalled opportunities for international investment.

With Fidelity Funds you have the choice of where, when and how to invest - around the world - backed by the global investment expertise of the world's largest independent investment management organisation.

For a prospectus and further information please contact any of the Fidelity offices listed below.

London: Hilary Smith 44 71 70 70 71
Munich: Stanley Brons 49 89 31 100
Taipei: Bonita Lee 2764 2765

Hong Kong: Richard Waincoat 852 848 1700
Amsterdam: Teun Scher 31 20 710 976
Jersey: Geoffrey Bait 44 534 7100

Bermuda: Mike Somerville 1 809 295 0665

Fidelity Investments

Registered at the post office. Printed by St. Clements Press for and published by The Fidelity Funds Ltd, Number 10, Southwark Bridge Road, London SE1 1TA.

ANC elects moderate secretary general

By Patti Waldmeir in Durban

THE AFRICAN National Congress yesterday elected a moderate new leadership that will sharpen the organisation's image and strengthen its standing team in talks on a post-apartheid constitution for South Africa.

In the most significant leadership shift of the organisation's 75-year history, the ANC signalled its intention to move from the battlefield to the conference by electing a new secretary-general, Mr Cyril Ramaphosa, who has proved himself to be black South Africa's most able negotiator.

As general-secretary of the National Union of Mineworkers since 1983, and as a respected community leader in Soweto, Mr Ramaphosa, 42, has gained a reputation as a tough but flexible bargaining partner.

His election to one of the ANC's top four posts puts him in direct line to succeed Mr Nelson Mandela, 72, who was yesterday elected unopposed as ANC president.

Some 2,000 delegates to the ANC's national conference in Durban voted in the leadership elections. These were seen by many as the first legitimate national elections held in South Africa, where national polls exclude blacks.

Mr Ramaphosa's election reinforced Mr Mandela's message earlier in the week that supporters should prepare for constitutional negotiations "sooner rather than later".

As Mr Ramaphosa's deputy, the conference elected Mr Walter Sisulu, 79, of the former prisoners who have previously dominated the ANC leadership.

It was Mr Oliver Tambo, the incumbent president, who was incapacitated by a stroke three years ago as ANC national chairman.

The great apartheid, Page 3

NEC 'regrets' Iran military deal

By Robert Thomson in Tokyo

AN ELECTRONICS subsidiary of Japan's NEC Corporation admitted yesterday that it had unlawfully shipped components for use in Iranian missiles. Japanese police further alleged that it had supplied navigation equipment for Iranian jet fighters.

Japan Aviation Electronics Industry Company, in which NEC holds a 50.3 per cent stake, produces navigation equipment for rockets and aircraft. It was forbidden by Japanese law from exporting military-related technology to Iran during the Iran-Iraq war.

The company admitted that it had "repaired" and exported, via Singapore, about 1,500 flywheels, which were used to improve the guidance of Iran's Sidewinder air-to-air missiles.

The Japanese government, which has begun to take a higher profile in international moves to curb greater arms control. The government is also concerned that its reputation in Washington may suffer.

NEC said it was "truly regrettable" that an affiliate had been implicated. The Japan Defence Agency said it might withdraw licences from JAEI, which last year was fined for its dealings with the agency.

Mr Toshiki Kaifu, Japan's prime minister, said the government would "deal strictly" with JAEI, and hoped that the scandal would not affect his relations with President Bush next week.

Mr Kaifu is visiting the US on the way to the Group of Seven meeting in London, where he has planned to push for tougher controls on arms exports.

After police raids on JAEI's offices yesterday, investigators were still uncertain about the extent of its dealings with Iran from 1984 to 1989.

Mr Koichi Kondo, JAEI's managing director, said JAEI had paid about ¥30m for the flywheels. He apologised for the company's "mistake", but said "only a few people" were aware that the components were for missiles. "Flywheels are new to our company".

Police said they had been tipped off by US investigators involved in the Iran-Contra case. They expressed disbelief that a company, which is a world leader in making electronics, would only be requested to "repair" flywheels - a relatively simple task.

JAEI makes liquid crystal displays for US air collision avoidance systems, sophisticated remote-control helicopters for weaponry, and advanced navigation equipment for the J2E missile which is being developed by Japan's National Space Development Agency.

Police alleged that JAEI had also supplied navigation components for Iranian F4 Phantom jets from 1983 to 1988, again via Singapore.

Brokers' Bill, Page 3

Brent Walker banks object to terms of rescue package

By Maggie Urry

A POTENTIALLY critical hitch has developed in the talks between Brent Walker and his banks over the UK leisure group's rescue plan.

The Bank of England is understood to have stepped in again to help smooth matters. A banker said yesterday: "Things are critical. It is coming to a crunch point."

Brent Walker announced yesterday that some of its 47 banks had objected to the deal agreed more than two weeks ago with a consortium of Brent Walker's £101.9m of convertible bonds.

Another stumbling block to the restructuring plan is that some of the banks, mainly Japanese, have approved it in principle but are refusing to put it into effect.

The plan included Brent Walker borrowing a further £70m, of which £30m has already been lent, to cover working capital needs and some small but essential capital expenditures.

The Bank of England has apparently discussed the problem with the Bank of Japan.

Under "London rules" if new money is needed in a refinancing, all the banks involved contribute in proportion to the size of their original exposure. By contrast, the Japanese practice is for the lead banks only put in fresh loans.

The Bank of England was involved last October when Brent Walker was threatened with receivership, and in May helped to persuade Hill Samuel, Brent Walker's merchant bank, not to resign.

Mr Walker's banks had hardened their attitude when they were asked by Mr Walker to remain on the board.

Mr Walker, who was ousted as chief executive at the end of May, is still a non-executive director. On Tuesday he defeated an attempt to remove him from the board at a special meeting of shareholders.

A banker said that since Mr Walker had served writs on most of the steering committee banks a week ago, it has been a superhuman job to get the banks into line.

The banks' concern at the bondholders' terms is that they have been given security through the proposal to convert part of the bonds into £73.2m of secured loan stock.

Two bondholders keep the banks in the security hierarchy as the banks are swapping £250m of their loans into equity.

The bondholders argue that they have delivered their side of the deal - signed between them, the company, the company's advisers and some of the steering committee banks - and the company should adhere to its bargain.

Labour sets up inquiry into Walton by-election

By Alison Smith

LABOUR yesterday ordered an inquiry into the actions of members who failed to support Mr Peter Kilroy, the Labour party victor of Thursday's Liverpool Walton by-election.

A report on the by-election will go to Labour's national executive's organisation sub-committee in about 10 days. Officials gathered evidence during the campaign about party members who supported Mr Lesley Mahmood, the leaving Real Labour candidate, who polled fewer than 3,000 votes.

The report could name up to 30 people against whom there was immediate prima facie evidence of working for Mr Mahmood. It is likely to be followed by further reports.

Although Mr Roy Hattersley, Labour's deputy leader, said an inquiry would be normal after any by-election, attention will inevitably focus on Mr Terry Fields, the Labour MP for the nearby constituency of Wirral South, who took no part in Mr Kilroy's campaign.

Mr Neil Kinnock, the Labour leader, said that those involved in Mr Mahmood's campaign would be dealt with under the party's constitution. Although he said the disciplinary officer, he said Mr Fields was explain why he had not campaigned for Mr Kilroy.

As Mr Kinnock called the result, which saw Labour's majority cut from more than 23,000 to less than 7,000 by the Labour Democrats, "a fine by-election win", Mr Chris Patten, the Tory party chairman, admitted that the Tories' performance was "disappointing".

Some Tories say privately that the party needs to act to try to remedy its apparent irrelevance in some inner cities. Publicly, however, Mr Patten and Mr Hattersley Greenwood, the Tory candidate, attributed his last defeat and fourth place to tactical voting by Labour Conservative supporters which helped Mr Paul Clark, the Liberal Democrat candidate.

Mr Clark said the result, on a turnout of under 60 per cent, was "an indictment of tired policies" and showed there was "no love for Labour".

Further talk: Lessons, Page 4

Fewer Names likely to face heavy losses

ONLY about 40 Names - the individuals whose capital backs underwriting at Lloyd's - are expected to lose more than £100,000 as a result of the insurance market's losses in 1989, far fewer than expected, writes Richard Inge, a specialist in catastrophe and US liability business.

It is understood that about 750 of the Names will lose less than £50,000 after tax. Lloyd's has reported an overall deficit of £510m for 1989, when losses were concentrated among syndicates of Names specialising in catastrophe and US liability business.

Some 10,000 Names will make a profit, with one making a net profit of £200,000. About 8,000 Names will register losses of under £5,000, while 10,000 Names can expect to lose up to £20,000. The calculations are on the assumption that Lloyd's Names pay tax at UK rates.

Many Names, however, face the cost of additional cash calls as a result of earlier losses and could pay a total of £200m this year.

Some of the most badly affected Names will be able to call on stop loss policies to reduce the impact of losses.

ICI Continued from Page 1

Mr Friend may deal "could be a real deal" would increase its stake in pharmaceuticals. However, ICI could not afford to spend several billion pounds buying a major pharmaceutical business outright.

An acceptable model would be last year's merger of Rhône-Poulenc with Sanofi-Synthelabo, the French chemical group, which merged its pharmaceutical business with Rhône of the US and took a 68 per cent stake in the merged company.

A partial takeover of that kind, leading to a separately quoted pharmaceutical company in which ICI had a majority stake, would require substantial outlay - the net cost of Rhône-Poulenc was $1.7bn - but it would be feasible financially for ICI.

Mr Friend would not identify the companies that ICI had shortlisted. It is believed to have had merger discussions with Wellcome of the UK and some of the steering committee banks - and the company should adhere to its bargain.

Japanese drug companies have approached ICI about an international alliance, according to Mr Friend, "but we have always said we are not really

WORLDWIDE WEATHER

Today: The hot and sultry weather will be overtaken by fresher but still pleasantly warm conditions from the south-west. Thunder rain will break out in parts of the south-west and Wales in the afternoon, but it will be predominantly dry over central and southern regions. Outlook: dry and sunny.

Location	Temp	Wind	Cloud	Temp	Wind	Cloud	Temp	Wind	Cloud
London	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly
Manchester	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly
Birmingham	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly
Cardiff	15	13	Partly	15	13	Partly	15	13	Partly
Edinburgh	14	14	Partly	14	14	Partly	14	14	Partly
Glasgow	13	15	Partly	13	15	Partly	13	15	Partly
Liverpool	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly
Newcastle	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly
Nottingham	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly
Sheffield	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly
Sunderland	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly	16	12	Partly
Wolverhampton	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly	17	11	Partly
Wrexham	15	13	Partly	15	13	Partly	15	13	Partly
York	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly	18	10	Partly

Racing to beat the prophets of doom

Michael Thompson-Noel studies current form off the track on very hard going

HORSE RACING is the sport of kings, but also that of sheikhs, nabobs, crooks, the super-rich and almost broke, the beautiful and damned. It is a fantasy world propped on mountains of cash that keep on disappearing — mainly, in Britain, into the lead-lined pockets of the cleverest players of all, the bookmakers.

At present, British racing is harried by recession. Gloom is all around. Betting is subdued, owners are cutting back and some businesses are folding. As a committee of MPs said in May, after studying the horse-race betting levy which keeps the sport going: "The fat years are at an end."

Yet with its penchant for exaggeration, the racing world has overdone the gloom thing and is in danger of talking itself into depression. In spite of hard times, the show goes on — just as it always has. Today, for example, at Sandown Park racecourse, a glossy field of racehorses, some worth millions, will contest a six-figure prize in the Coral Eclipse Stakes, one of the season's most glamorous events and one that emphasises the sport's traditions and longevity.

To discover where racing is heading, I went in search of three men — a racehorse trainer, the chief executive of the Jockey Club, and an expert on bookmaking — who are particularly well placed to peer beyond the recession and to set the sport's ceaseless money-wrangling in some sort of context.

I did not look for losers. Instead, my first port of call was Beckhampton Stables, in the drowsy Wiltshire countryside, where Roger Charlton — tall, courteous, bespectacled, intelligent — trains 85 horses, many of which race for blue-chip owners. Breckers like Prince Khalid Abdullah of Saudi Arabia, Stavros Niarchos, Lord Derby and Lord Weinstock.

Charlton electrified the UK racing world last year — his first season as a trainer — by sending out the winners of two Derbys, the English and the French, and earning £2.2m in win-and-place prize money. Of that, about £800,000 was gathered in by Quest for Fame (winner of the English Derby) and Sanglamore (French). Both money-spinners are still in training as four-year-olds. Indeed, Sanglamore lines up for today's big Sandown race.

Quest for Fame and Sanglamore were part of the string Charlton inherited from the former boss of Beckhampton, Jeremy Tree, to whom Charlton was assistant trainer for 12 years. Today, Charlton owns a majority of the shares in Beckhampton Stables Ltd, though Tree retains a stake.

To start with two Derby winners in his first full season as a trainer marked Charlton as golden-fingered. But as well as luck, he has talent and great shrewdness. His background is perfect: a farming-and-horsey childhood, then point-to-points and racing; 2½ years in stockbroking; then a long apprenticeship at Beckhampton, where recent successes mean that debt of £100,000-plus has been worked down to zero over the past four years.

When I met Charlton he was wearing a phosphorescent green cardigan, cream slacks and suede casuals. "I have been very, very lucky, whereas most trainers are crippled by overdrafts," he said. "Our yard's capacity of 68 horses is not really viable because racing is definitely a percentage game when it comes to getting winners. The more horses you train, the more your chances of producing champions."

"On the other hand, 350 horses here at Beckhampton would be chaos. The more horses, the more headaches, especially in dealing with owners. Perhaps 80-90 would be an ideal number. At that level I could compete with the best. My luck last year lay in having two exceptional horses. Winners like that will carry a yard. I did some calculations, and found that last season my all-up cost, including maintenance of stable and gallops but excluding a salary for myself, was £24.50 per horse per day, whereas my training charge to owners was £32 per horse per day. What carried us through was the trainer's percentage of 10% prize money (say 10% of £250,000) plus the income from the sale of the horse to the owner. I am deriving from good horses trained by Jeremy in the past."

Not all gloom. In spite of the recession, lucky racehorse owners like Sir Gordon Brunton, the well-known businessman and chairman of the Racing Post, are still enjoying themselves. He is pictured with his gallant six-year-old mare, Indian Queen, which scored a cork-popping, 25-1, six-figure prize success, by a neck, in last month's Ascot Gold Cup. "We race our horses for fun," said Sir Gordon in the unsaddling enclosure.

So far, Charlton's 1991 season has been as quiet as the tomb compared with the fairground of his first season, though in recent days Beckhampton's form has turned red-hot. To survive, trainers have to be astute and financially able. For example, Beckhampton has planning permission to build an additional 20-horse barn, which would cost a minimum of £100,000. "That money would have to be borrowed," says Charlton. "Fortunately, I held off. If I had gone ahead and built it just as the recession was striking racing, it would have been totally empty this spring."

"So far, no-one has asked me to buy a yearling for them to race next year. Times are depressing. The recession has hit racing very hard. Big names are backing out, others haven't come forward. In recent months, would-be owners have read a huge mass of damaging statistics and analysis spelling out how low the average prize money returns are for owners in Britain."

On the other hand, Charlton, the prospect of extra money for racing, as recommended recently by the House of Commons' home affairs committee, would be a big help, "especially as the low point in the recession must be approaching — the moment when it is fair to tell owners to start nibbling again: that now is the time to buy nice horses at sensible prices that stand a fair chance of making good returns."

Of the racing business generally, Charlton says that "good people who run their businesses professionally ought to survive." And he says it is hard to disagree with the contention that over a reasonable time-scale — particularly the 1980s — British racing can be shown to have prospered mightily. In 1989, the number of horses in training in Britain (both flat and jump racing) was 12,961, against 9,761 in 1977; there were 1,005 race-fixtures in '89, against 896 in '77; track attendances were 4.9m, versus 4.1m; prize money was £171m against £8.5m; and £1.4m betting turnover had been made out of its mid-1980s trough by the impact of live race-broadcasts to betting shops.

At present, most growth-lines are dropping. But if the recession is doing little else, it is reinforcing the truism that horse-racing is for those who know what they are doing. Owners need to be wealthy, unless they are huddled safely in multi-owner syndicates; racehorse breeders have to be well-capitalised to survive the jungle of the bloodstock market; trainers need to know their peculiar craft intimately and not rest their hopes on debt and prayer; racecourses need marketing chutzpah.

Increasingly, the racing industry does seem to know what it is doing, according to Christopher Haines, an experienced businessman, now chief executive of the Jockey Club, which governs the sporting side of racing (rules, fixtures, discipline, etc.) though it does not control the purse-strings.

In May, the MPs' report on the betting levy upheld the Jockey Club's argument that the bookmakers pay too little for the privilege of sucking good profits out of racing, and suggested that the sum paid to racing via the Horserace Betting Levy Board be boosted from around £37m at present to £50m (1991 prices), starting next year — the extra being paid for, insisted the MPs, by the Big Three bookmaking firms, Ladbrokes, Coral, William Hill, and not the hapless punters. This was an important victory for the Jockey Club — the first real reversal the bookies had suffered in many a long year.

"For the first time," says Haines, "racing's fundamental problem was given official recognition — that the betting levy is set at far too low a rate. Our aim had been to change the nature of the debate and get the MPs to realise that racing is in the final stages of maturing from a sport into an industry."

"What I've done since arriving at the Jockey Club is to assemble a proper financial overview of racing. We now have a model of the industry and can see the true economics. We can talk real business. The frustration I have is that racing does not have a direct negotiating relationship with the bookies. This is what we want to achieve, for we are determined that there is a recognised relationship between the costs of the racing product and its value."

I put it to Haines that the Jockey Club was still burdened by its image as a pompous and fuddy-duddy, almost fendal, body that was self-elected, self-serving, snobbish and run by land-owners and aristocrats out of touch with modern business life. He did not hit the root. "Self-elected? That we can't deny," he said cheerfully. "Self-serving? There is no sign of that at all. Snobbish and land-owning? We are just words. The current team of stewards contains a great deal of business experience."

"The Jockey Club must be judged on what it does. Look around and you will find a degree of co-operation within racing that is much greater than imagined or acknowledged. There are working parties on all sorts of matters; problems are being solved all the time. I am genuinely optimistic about racing's future. In business, you often have to invent a new product and then spend a fortune refining it and marketing it. But racing hasn't got to do that. It has a wonderful product already."

In spite of Haines' upbeat assessment,

There are high hopes that this will be a vintage English flat-racing season ment of racing's future, hopes that the bookies can be sweet-talked into dipping into their own pockets and handing the sport an extra £13m or so (at 1991 prices), as suggested by the MPs, are likely to be disappointed. The bookies are adamant: they did not like the MPs' report ("superficial and populist") and have no intention of seeing their profits lowered to boost racing's income. If they were backed into a corner, they say, they would simply pass the burden of higher levy payments on to the punters, who already pay a 10 per cent change off-track to cover betting tax (8 per cent), betting levy, VAT, and who knows what.

To find out why the bookies are so intransigent, I went to see Tom Kelly, one-time editor of the Sporting Chronicle, now director of the Betting Office Licensees' Association, members of which own nearly 6,000 of Britain's 9,500 off-track betting offices. Kelly is a hard man to argue with: a doughty baseliner who aims statistics at you with robot-like efficiency.

"The first three months of 1991 were fairly disastrous, with total betting turnover — plus other sports — down 6.6 per cent, or £120m," said Kelly. "We expect things to pick up a bit, though as long as the recession lasts we don't expect betting to outpace spending on other leisure activities. Anyway, 28 per cent of UK betting shops have a turnover of less than £220,000, which is barely viable."

"One of the reasons we found the MPs' report superficial is that we

Continued Page XIX

CONTENTS

Finance: Make your personal money work for you	page III
Books: What I've read on your summer holidays	page IX
Art: Saving money from the art market	page X
How to Spend It: Magical deals on Persian carpets	page XVII
Sport: Young women renew an rivalry at Wimbledon	page XIX
View: Tony O'Reilly: hero of Heinz	page XXIV

Learning to cook, to serve and to make money... student chefs at college in Birmingham page XVII

Arts	XXIII
Books	XXIII
Bridge	XXIII
Chess	XXIII
Collecting	XXIII
Crossword	XXIII
Finance & the Family	XXIII
Food & Wine	XXIII
Gardening	XXIII
How to Spend It	XXIII
Markets	XXIII
Motoring	XXIII
Property	XXIII
Sport	XXIII
Michael Thompson-Noel	XXIII
Travel	XXIII
TV & Radio	XXIII

The Long View/Barry Riley

Superpay for superboss

MONEY is the appropriate measure of success in capitalism, and hefty remuneration now awarded to themselves by many top executives are symptoms of the triumph not just of capitalism in general but of international managerial capitalism in particular.

I make the distinction because historically capitalism was about the entrepreneur and the proprietor; managers were mere hirelings and administrators, and given a suitably low status.

But today, for most large companies, the proprietor has become an absent investment institution or, in some countries, a grey banker. This has raised all sorts of governance issues, not least in remuneration, and the opportunity has been there for the hiring managers to drop their subservient pose and pursue a boardroom power revolution.

In the UK the average chief executive's pay in top public companies has risen roughly from £90,000 to £400,000 over the past ten years. That is an increase of 4.5 times, about double the rise in the pay of the average employee.

You can call this greed, insensitivity or imprudence. Yet there is a clear message being sent out of a rather different, economic kind. The advanced industrial countries in recent decades have generated unprecedented wealth and technological progress, and it has been achieved by and large by independent corporate enterprises. Nikita Khrushchev boasted that communism would bury capitalism, but Lenin the centrally-planned economies lie in ruins. Now the leaders of this counter-revolution are claiming their rewards. The message is going in the politicians and the civil servants, who are trapped by their own propaganda in a low pay spiral, and are furious at this assertion of rival supremacy. The word is also directed at the managers who quickly note shifts in wealth and power; at any rate, the civil service seems dull by comparison.

Go back just 15 or 20 years and British managers were still an oppressed class. They were heavily taxed as individuals — at up to 83 per cent of their earned income — and quite senior executives would find it worthwhile to take a week off to decorate their houses. Their business freedom was controlled by price controls, controls and foreign exchange controls. Political bodies such as the Industrial Reorganisation Corporation were set up to tell them what to do. They were mercilessly bullied by the trade unions.

Now the pendulum has swung since then, and pay levels are the measure of it. When the Conservatives cut the top tax rate to 60 and then 40 per cent it was suggested that this might encourage moderation in pre-tax incomes, but there has been absolutely no such effect. Of course, it is likely that part of the apparent growth in pay reflects the emergence of under-the-counter payments into the daylight: bonus days, possibly, bonus himself pays his mortgage instalments and his gardener and buys his wife's car (though he certainly does not stump up for his Wimbledon tickets). But pay has now become a key factor in the power game: even if top executives do not want to keep the score.

But are they really worth it? The performance of British companies has been patchy. Some of the highest-paid British managers in the 1980s, recipients of £1m pay packets, have driven their companies close to disaster. Perhaps the long-term performance of capitalism does deserve to be recognised and rewarded. But there is a nasty suspicion that too often the bonanza has been grabbed by a handful of powerful individuals at the top of the corporate pyramid, while lower down the humble production manager, for example, remains exploited and unrecognised.

So, self-recognition is a dangerous aggrandisement — dangerously small. A successful large modern corporation has usually developed over the years its own culture and its own ambitions. Ideas can come up from below, and the structure should be flexible enough to cope with changing conditions. In these circumstances the chief executive should be more of a good housekeeper than a flamboyant entrepreneur.

But instead we have tended to see the cult of the individual. The company boss does not get into the headlines through dedicated attention to quality control, or by updating his company's training methods, but by doing aggressive deals.

There is a risk that man paid £500,000 a year will not make money to demonstrate that he is clearly worth it; a big man must do big things.

Here we come up against the governance problem: capitalism may be triumphant, but it is running short of true capitalists.

The measure of success for the entrepreneur is the value placed on his company by the stock market, which usually gets it right.

But the market in chief executives is highly inefficient, as any glance at the haphazard rewards of top industrialists will show.

Big managers feel they should pay more, but that encourages top managers to seek increased managers through managers of uncertain benefit to shareholders or the economy at large. Insecurity and risk count for a good deal at this level, as does the task of coping with highly competitive conditions; privatised utilities may feel justified in paying managers on the first count, but they are prone when they confuse the exploit of monopolies and sweetheart regulations with skilful management of a competitive business.

The profits squeeze will now put a cap on executive remuneration temporarily, but I fear we are also seeing a scramble through the open window ahead of the election of a Labour government. Even John Major is unwisely making judgments about the level of top executive pay. Managerial capitalism has yet to fight some more battles.

Private Clients Seeking a stockbroker?

At Greenwell Montagu Stockbrokers, private clients are the backbone of our business. We place real importance on the strength of our personal relationships. Links with some of our clients and their families go back several generations.

Just as times have changed for them, they have changed for us too. In today's markets we are determined to achieve every advantage that technology can bring, in the dealing room, in settlement operations and in portfolio management — but we are equally determined to be old-fashioned when it comes to client relationships. Knowing you as a private individual will help us to follow your best interests when we invest your money.

Please call David Loudon on 071-588 8817 for an informal discussion, or send the form for further information about our services.

Smith Keen Cutler in Birmingham, and our offices in Lymington and Hereford also offer full stockbroking services.

The J.D. Loudon
Greenwell Montagu Stockbrokers, 114 Old Broad Street, London EC2P 2HY

Name _____
Address _____

GREENWELL MONTAGU
STOCKBROKERS

Birmingham Office: (Smith Keen Cutler)
Exchange Buildings, Stephenson Place, Birmingham B2 4NN Tel. 021 632 1100.

Lymington Office: 98 High Street, Lymington, Hants SO41 9AP Tel. 0590 674288.

Hereford Office: 11 Bridge Street, Hereford HR4 9DG Tel. 0432 264646.

A Member of The Securities and Futures Authority and the London Stock Exchange

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

London Markets

Clouds hide a shaft of sunlight

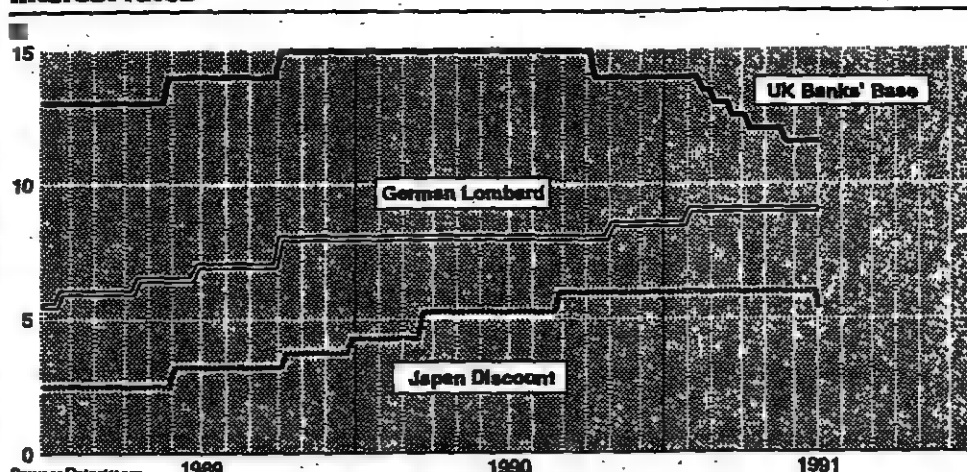

IT WAS a week when a rare shaft of sunlight pierced the UK - and the prospect of a cut in the UK - coaxed the FTSE back into positive territory after the losses of recent sessions. But it was also a week when poor results, disappointing statistics and inflated corporate pay packages continued to monopolise the business-page headlines.

All told, the FTSE 100 closed ahead 69.9 at 2,494.7, thus recovering two-thirds of the ground lost in the second half of June. Volume, however, remained mediocre, with yesterday at nearly 600m shares thanks to heavy technical trading in J Sainsbury.

Even in a quiet period of financial reporting, British Steel, British Electric and Dowty Group all unveiled year-on-year profit reductions. Lucas Industries, the car component and aerospace group, broadcast a second-half profit warning. And Alan Sugar's new toy, Tottenham Hotspur, reported a £2.14m interim loss.

British Steel's decline was the steepest of the three at 65 per cent to £254m. The company made only £90m in the second half, down from £204m a year earlier. The company, which was privatised in 1988, also announced a substantial restructuring of its plate production facilities calling for the replacement of existing mills at Dalzell and Scunthorpe with a new facility at Dalzell. Shares closed ahead 2 1/2p on the week at 124p.

Interest rates

GEC's fall was by a comparatively sedate 6.2 per cent to £518m, with the company's earnings by the UK US as well as lower demand in continental Europe. Lord Weinstock, managing director, said he could not remember the last time the group failed to increase its dividend, which totalled 9.25p per share for the year to March.

The shares fell 1p to 187p.

Recession in the aerospace and defence sectors were the main problems at Dowty, where profits dipped by 29 per cent to £60.6m. A month ago, the Cheltenham-based company had reported a 20 per cent increase in profits.

The news was also poor from Granada, the television, leisure and business services group, where interim profits for the 26 weeks to April 13 dropped from £63.3m to £58.5m. On a more positive note, the company said that it had succeeded in cutting its debt to £240m.

This followed a £163m rights issue and the £17m sale of bingo clubs to Bass, the brewer. The rights issue, which at 140p was at a large discount to the preceding 210.5p market price, was associated with the departure of Derek Lewis as chief executive. The shares lost 7p to 135p.

Alleviating the gloom, a string of regional electricity companies generated income well in excess of flotation prospectus forecasts. With pre-tax profits of £81.4m, Seaboard - the south-eastern regional company - managed to exceed its forecast by as much as 36 per cent.

In similar vein, Orwat - the water industry regulator - reported that first-year profits of £1.4m at the UK water companies came in £288m higher than government expectations before privatisation.

The 16 per cent average increase in dividends was slightly less than expected, and there was a higher than assumed proportion of profits being ploughed back into the businesses, Ian Byatt, the Orwat director general, said. He warned, however, that shareholders who were "not doing badly" should expect a "much lower growth in dividend in the future."

On the statistical front, perhaps the most depressing news was that June car sales had fallen to a 20-year low. New car registrations declined to just 98,204 from 142,697 a year ago and have now fallen for 21 of the past 22 months. The figures did much to explain Ford's announcement that it was cutting prices of selected models.

To compound matters, the biggest domestic housebuilders - who must already feel that the roof has caved in - reported that the hesitant spring sales recovery had petered out. Buyers who previously had been put off by high interest rates were now wary about rising unemployment and the state of the economy, companies said. More than half the groups questioned said June sales were at or below comparable 1990 levels.

It was not all wine and roses for interest rates either. In an economic outlook, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development forecast a further rise in German short-term interest rates as a consequence of inflationary pressures associated with developments in Germany. As policy makers are all too well aware, the condition of Europe's largest economy will have a more powerful bearing on future UK interest rate trends than glad tidings from Japan.

The OECD also forecast that the UK economy would grow at an annual rate of only 0.3 per cent in the second half. Although there are now signs that the fall in output in Britain has reached bottom, the Paris-based agency said, the gross domestic product in the first half of this year might have been some 3 per cent below that of the same period last year. This would be as severe a drop over 12 months as in the 1980-81 recession.

But the last topic of the moment is executive pay. Yet more grist was added to the mill in the form of a near tripling to £200,000 of PowerGen chief executive Ed Wallis's salary and a further pay rise for John Baker, chairman of National Power.

In the circumstances, it was gracious of British Steel chairman Sir Robert Schreyer to accept a small pay cut in deference to his company's poor 1990-91 performance. Sir Robert emphasised that "you cannot dissociate productivity and pay" but said that he was "giving anything to charity."

In 1989-90, he had received an enviable 79 per cent increase to more than £300,000.

David Owen

Serious Money

Time to bridge the knowledge gap

By Philip Coggan, Personal Finance Editor

IF YOU are a saver, you will be prepared to bet the salary of a privatised utility that you could have produced a very different result if you had been allowed to phrase the question.

How about "I would prefer to pay several hundreds of pounds in commission to a man who is likely to recommend only products that reward him, rather than pay an hourly fee to an adviser who will be able to recommend those products that most closely match my needs?" I am pretty sure that such a question would get a majority approval.

Fees are only likely to deter consumers if they believe in the value added by the opaque system of disclosure imposed by the regulators, that commission comes out of some central "pot" and not out of their own pockets.

In a hope that for those who want consumers to get a better deal from financial services providers? One chink of light in the Mintel report is the survey evidence that people are rather more shrewd when it comes to the more basic savings products. Offered the misleading "On the whole, banks give you a better interest on your savings than building societies" do, only 9 per cent of respondents agreed.

It is an encouraging sign that more than one-third of adults has a bank current account which pays interest, especially as the banks have hardly fallen over themselves to promote these accounts since they were introduced in the late 1980s.

The Mintel survey also reveals some interesting statistics on the structure of the savings market. Only 6 per cent of the public was shown to have a Tax Efficient Special Savings Account (TESSA). But when you consider that the survey was conducted in February 1991, that means that in one month after their introduction, TESSAs were able to penetrate the savings market to unit trusts (owned by 5 per cent of the public) have after 60 years.

However, the TESSAs are unlikely to have increased their market share by any appreciable amount which, after all, was an important aim of their creation. All those who had opened TESSAs, 10 per cent had done so by transferring money from another account and 51 per cent said they would save in a TESSA rather than in an existing account.

Despite the recent revival of private investor interest in investment trusts, unit trusts still have an edge in popular perception. Thirty-four per cent of respondents agreed that "unit trusts are the best way of investing in the stock market for the small investor", compared with 20 per cent who disagreed, and a whopping 46 per cent who did not know.

Amongst that small minority who did know the difference between a unit and investment trust, 55 per cent agreed with the statement.

So in short, a lot of public education remains to be done. Newspapers can try to do a part of it, but their narrow personal finance pages serve an audience that is already, by being more interested, more knowledgeable. It has to be up to the regulators to ensure that products should be explained as simply as possible, and as early as possible in the selling

A consumer who buys a product he or she does not understand is unlikely to get a good deal.

Finance into the future, published by Mintel Publications, 18-19 Long Lane, London EC1A 9SE.

wrong. In one of the broadest collaborative ventures which the computer industry has ever seen, IBM announced that it would work with Apple Computer, a former rival, in designing a new generation of desktop computers.

A joint venture company will produce new software, and the two partners say that products should be on sale within three or four years.

Clearly, such a deal has widespread implications for others in the sector and as the stock market was quick to give its verdict, Dow Jones shares of Microsoft, the US computer software company which dominates the personal computer market, losing 4 1/2% to $44 on the over-the-counter market. By the time the shares of Apple, almost $1 higher at $45 1/2.

Meanwhile, in a further sign towards 24-hour trading, the New York Stock Exchange said that trading would begin at 9am from early September - as opposed to 9:30 at present. This means a bigger overlap with London's trading day although if Japan still dominates the picture, half an hour will hardly help.

The other major corporate move centred on IBM, the computer giant which has become the subject of much speculation following its dismal third quarter figures, with analysts and commentators wondering whether the group is still capable of responding to changes in the computer market or has metamorphosed irretrievably into a corporate monolith.

Well, surprisingly, the company is out to prove its critics

Monday 2854.41 + 51.86
Tuesday 2854.70 + 14.31
Wednesday 2854.70 - 52
Thursday Closed

Nikki Tait

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK
	FTSE 100 Index	Change on week	1991 High	1991 Low	Notes
FTSE 100 Index	2494.7	+69.9	2518	2415	Revised base rate down
Abbey National	278	+19	288	211	US$ buy rec./interim due July 31.
Cambridge Scientific	548	+19	557	507	Offer shift on ST policy.
Cordbury Schweppes	378	+31	400	348	Mid speculation.
Hillside	234	+29	269	209	Recovery hopes.
Kingfisher	492	+31	509	462	Interest rate hopes.
London Electricity	217	+29 1/2	217	187	Utilities/recent good figs.
Natl. Home Loans	93	-28	107	83	Director resignation/contract downgrade.
Seaboard	659	-57	659	509	Interim profits drop 60%.
Slade	481	+35	481	289	Enthusiasm over Fashoro.
Union King	305	-58	304	255	Profits downgrading.
Smithkline Beecham A	795	+41 1/2	795	695	Renewed hopes for Sarcom sales.
South West Water	278	+24	277	238	Included in 'County 90'.
United Breweries	380	+23	387	317	Mid speculation.
Wellcome	699	+51	699	609	Optimism on virus drug sales.

AT A GLANCE

Yield ratio sheds light on shares

The relationship between the yield on long dated gilts and the FT-A All-Share Index is one of the most important factors in deciding whether equities are cheap or dear. The higher the ratio, the more the yields on gilts attract and the greater the likelihood of investors selling shares to buy bonds. When the ratio is low, shares are more attractive. The graph shows that the yield ratio has increased the ratio but it still sits of the long term average and a long way from the peak reached in 1987.

Profits fall at British Steel

British Steel reported a 29 per cent fall in profits for the year to March 30 on Monday - down from £204m in 1989-90. Markets were expecting the 65 per cent drop and the share price fluctuation was only £10.5p and 125p divided in the week. In 1990, the final dividend was 5.75p.

Smaller company indices slide

Small company indices and their downward slide this week. The Hoare Govett index (gains version) dropped 8.65 per cent to 1165.15 in the week to July 4, while the County index fell 10.15 to 943.46. Last week, we referred to the Hoare Govett total returns index which was then 1165.15.

Pacific Rim bonds find favour

Some of the Pacific Rim bond markets have provided the best returns for starting-based investors this month, according to the Hoare Govett Investment Management Company (KIMCO). The Australian government bond market has risen 4.95 per cent and Japanese bonds increased by 4.95 per cent. This compares with a return of 0.02 per cent by the gilt market during the same period.

Since the start of the year, the top-performing bond markets in sterling have been New Zealand (13.65 per cent), Japan (10.71 per cent), and Australia (10.15 per cent). The UK gilt market has risen by only 0.02 per cent.

Date for EJ McCann investors

Happy investors with EJ McCann shares, which were acquired in 1988, will be reminded that they can claim the tax relief on the Investment Compensation Scheme. Shares will be issued on October 4, 1991, and the company must be in liquidation.

A fixed-rate mortgage at 10.75%

John Charcol, the mortgage adviser, has brought a fixed rate mortgage of 10.75 per cent (APR 12.9 per cent) until 30 September 1994. The mortgage has to be taken out by 30 November 1991 and there is an arrangement fee of £200. Applicants must put up a 5 per cent deposit on the value of the home. The new mortgage is available on endowment, pension and Pep mortgages and an interest-only loan of up to £100,000. John Charcol is also offering a rate of 12.5 per cent (APR 13.1 per cent) capped until September 1991.

Wall Street

Not a day for independence

THE FIREWORKS crackled and exploded over Manhattan on Thursday night as the US celebrated its 215th birthday. Down on Wall Street, the stock market managed a few, rather more modest fireworks in the abbreviated holiday week, but independence was not the prevailing theme.

Japanese influence is still pervasive. The cut in Japanese interest rates and the rise in the Nikkei index were widely cited as factors behind Wall Street's 51.7 point surge on Monday. And a new wave of worries about the rumbling Tokyo securities houses scandal was said to be a major reason for the subsequent 38-point fall on Wednesday.

Worries persist that more Japanese money will be drained from the US financial system, creating disruption in both the bond and stock markets.

Both increasingly slavish adherence to the points up the lack of direction back home if the US economy were to be hit by a recession, for example, or takeovers were back in fashion, it is hard to imagine quite so much attention being paid to trials and tribulations 7,000 miles away.

Instead, on the economic front, the US recovery remains fitful at best. Moreover, the next corporate reporting season will get under way within the next few weeks, so micro-analysts are largely on hold. Not surprisingly, then, investors and traders took full advantage of the holiday weekend. Dealing volumes were at a low ebb.

Certainly, the economic pointers which emerged during the week merely reinforced the impression of economy limping hesitantly out of recession. The National Association of Purchasing Managers index proved surprisingly buoyant on Monday, suggesting that the economy grew last month, after twelve months of contraction. Similarly encouraging reports on consumer sentiment and factory orders followed.

But by mid-week, the housing data cast a pall of gloom, suggesting that the economy grew last month, after twelve months of contraction. Similarly encouraging reports on consumer sentiment and factory orders followed.

marked lack of reaction - with the Dow Jones Industrial Average little changed.

The housing data probably underlines one of the core problems still impeding any significant upturn - namely, the state of US commercial banks. Some industrialists suggest that while customers in select regions of the country are starting to bite again, the persistent credit crunch continues to choke demand.

It seems that widespread banking problems are far from over. This week, Security Pacific, joined by West Coast Bank, and Farg and the smaller First Interstate, in programme and important organisation of the bank's division, Dowty's biggest.

Thatcher must be given credit, too, for overseeing some of the most important thrusts in Dowty's responses to changing conditions. Over the past five years, Dowty's defence-related business has fallen from 60 to 30 per cent turnover, due partly to cancellation of defence orders but also to big contracts on civil engineering, such as the Airbus A330/340 programme and thrust reversers for the Boeing 777. This programme could be worth $80m to Dowty over the next 15 years.

A more questionable legacy of the ancient regime is Dowty's costly venture into the increasingly competitive UK telecommunications market. Analysts have watched Dowty spend £17m on setting up the infrastructure for Cognito were not to be a success. Dowty had signed up a prestige launch customer, the London telephone service. A further £15m will need to be spent on Cognito, which will be launched in August and go nationwide by the year's end.

The Bottom Line

Dowty Group still faces a bumpy ride

Share price relative to the FT-A All-Share Index

Ralph, now chief executive, and Roy Roberts, now chairman, in the top jobs. Both men were stepping up from the deputy positions with Roberts replacing Lord Barclay.

If the City's central reassurance that they certainly got it, Ralph may not have Thatcher's flamboyant touch, but he is well respected by analysts and expected to grow in the job.

Barclay, chairman of Simon Engineering, is a safe pair of hands for Dowty.

The essential message from the two men was "steady as she goes." There will be no major U-turns, and no big acquisitions. Roberts suggested the company may be heavily on essential areas of the business, and will be becoming "side-tracked" on projects which take too long to pay off.

They came all in praise Tony Thatcher - Roberts called his departure "a slight disappointment." But the former chief executive will be launched in August and go nationwide by the year's end.

Andrew Baxter

Investor rules

Investor rules

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

THE NEW HARP... MONEY... rules... The new Harp... money... rules... The new Harp... money... rules...

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

Don't be a slave to your debt

Scheherazade Daneshkhu and Philip Coggan report on ways to lessen the burden of your borrowings

IT WAS EASY to borrow money in the early and middle 1980s. Not to be in debt was dull, taking out the biggest mortgage that you could seemed the shortest route to riches.

Banks were falling over themselves to lend money, and many consumers, with incomes rising and interest rates relatively low, were only too eager to accept.

Then the bubble burst. The late 1980s and early 1990s have taught everyone a painful lesson about the effect of rising interest rates and falling incomes on a borrower's ability to repay.

In future, consumers will need to pay as careful attention to managing debts as to managing their savings. If you have more than one form of debt, which is the cheapest? And is it worth consolidating your debt in that form? If you are about to borrow to make a purchase, which is the best way of doing so? And what do you do if the burden becomes impossible to bear?

Types of debt

Overdrafts are one of the most expensive ways to borrow money. Banks tend to charge for each cheque and cash withdrawal you make, not only from the time you are overdrawn, but for the whole quarter. Every letter bearing you for being overdrawn will incur a charge, as can an "invitation" to meet the bank's manager to discuss matters.

It is far better to arrange an overdraft facility or a personal loan before you actually go into the red. Lloyds bank, for example, will charge an annual percentage rate (APR) of 24.5 per cent on its personal loans compared with 37.7 APR for an overdraft.

It is cheaper to take out a personal loan than an authorised overdraft. At Lloyds, the APR on both is the same but there are no other bank charges on a personal loan. Alternatively, most banks offer a gold card, allowing an overdraft of up to £10,000 at about 17 per cent APR, subject to an annual fee of about £20. While, however, is available to selected customers.

Some banks allow you to run up small overdrafts. Midland Bank's Vector account has an overdraft facility of £250 where no interest is paid, although you pay a monthly fee of £10. If you need a longer-term loan it is always better to get one that will allow capital repayment rather than one which ties you into a fixed-term. Otherwise, you will be obliged to repay the interest for the term of the loan even if you are able to pay off the capital. Some banks have introduced a charge for refinancing a loan. This could be about £50 for a £1,000 loan and is something to watch out for.

What do you need the loan for? If it is to pay off your credit card debt, Jean Eaglesham of the Consumer Association advises you to think again. The APR quoted by the bank is often lower than that of a credit card (Barclays Bank's APR is 24.1 per cent while Barclaycard's is 27.8 per cent), but the arrangement fees and transaction charges will make this more expensive.

Credit cards come into their own only when the balance is paid off in full every month, which means six weeks of free credit. Banks have tried to recoup the costs of such customers by making an annual charge, but there are still some non-charging cards available.

Store cards tend to carry higher interest rates than cards available from banks and building societies. If you are borrowing to buy a particular item it is worth checking what other forms of credit a store will grant.

"Interest-free" credit was one of the slogans of the 1980s and the sector sibling of hire purchase. Even Harrods is offering interest-free credit on selected items.

However, interest-free credit will usually mean a restricted choice - it will only be available on some brands and the repayment period is unlikely to exceed 12 months. Both interest-free credit and hire purchase will usually be offered at the full retail price, whereas you may be able to obtain a discount if you pay cash.

This is particularly true of cars. By paying cash and shopping around, it is possible to win up to 20 per cent off the full retail price of a car. In this case, it would probably be cheaper to take out a personal loan and eschew both interest-free credit and hire purchase. However, if you cannot get a discount, it should be more economical to accept the interest-free scheme so long as you can pay back the full amount within the time specified. In some circumstances, and certainly with HP, you could lose the goods if you do not keep up the repayments.

The APR on hire purchase schemes tends to be more expensive than on a bank loan, but this varies from product to product. Many car companies, for example, have their own finance outfits which may offer attractive terms.

The cheapest form of borrowing is a mortgage, since the lender is prepared to accept a lower interest rate because the loan is secured on the property. It may be tempting to try and consolidate your other loans into a mortgage.

Obviously, you should only do so if you are sure you can keep up the repayments. There is no point in remortgaging to pay school fees if there is a danger that your home will be sold away; nor is it worth remortgaging if you are seeking a short-term loan of less than £5,000. A personal bank loan would be better.

It will usually be cheaper to remortgage with your existing building society, unless the interest rate is particularly out of line with the market. If you do look to other lenders, remember to include arrangement and solicitors' when calculating whether switching will save.

Beware of those lenders in newspaper advertisements who offer to solve your borrowing worries. Usually they will only do so by charging a penal interest rate and taking a second mortgage on your home.

Savings

There is no such thing as a cheap loan and if you have savings you should use them to reduce your debt, including the mortgage.

Tony Shepherd, chairman of the Institute of Financial Planning, warns that you should never borrow for investment. It is a simple financial fact that you are unlikely to receive a return on your savings which is higher than the rate you pay on your borrowings.

Say you had £2,000 in a savings account and an overdraft of £2,000. At current interest rates, you might receive 10 per cent - £200 - on your savings every year. That would be reduced to £150 for a basic rate taxpayer and £130 for a higher rate taxpayer.

However, the overdraft would probably cost 20 per cent a year, or £400. Using your savings to pay off your overdraft would bring a net benefit of either £250 or £280 a year. The principle applies to those who pay interest on their monthly salary cheques should also consider using savings to pay down the debt. This particularly applies if your mortgage is larger than £50,000. A sum of £5,000 in the building society might earn you £550 before tax at today's interest rates - £375 after basic rate tax or £300 after the higher rate charge.

Paying off £5,000 from a £50,000 mortgage would save £620 a year, assuming a mortgage rate of 12.4 per cent. The net gain would be between £30 and £30 a month, but since building society interest is paid only once or twice a year, the homeowner's cashflow would benefit by £33 a month.

There could even be gains in paying down loans of less than £50,000 now higher rate tax relief has been abolished. In the case of the post-tax relief cost of a £5,000 chunk of mortgage would be £485. So, a homeowner would still gain £30 a year by using savings to redeem part of the loan.

It is possible to argue that savers could receive better long term returns from equities than from the building society. But these returns cannot be guaranteed, whereas paying down your debts is a certain way of improving your finances.

Problems

At the other end of the scale, for those up to their ears in debt, with gas and phone bills outstanding and mortgage

Stuart Davidson, of the London division of the Money Advice Support Unit of Citizens Advice Bureau, says that if you cannot pay your bills, you should first try to settle the account. If you are having problems with your mortgage, otherwise these services would be cut off immediately.

Next come mortgage bills and finally credit cards and bank loans. However, he advises talking to your unsecured lenders to see whether they will suspend interest on your bills for a time, to stop the debt rising. Sometimes a credit card company will suspend interest on your bill, as long as you settle the minimum payment and they are convinced that you seriously intend to settle the account. If you are having problems with your mortgage, the Prudential has the following advice:

■ Talk to your lender as soon as possible - particularly if you are about to miss a payment. If they know in advance, they will be more sympathetic. ■ Check that you are receiving all the social security benefits and payments and that you are getting all the right allowances. ■ Make a monthly spending budget - and stick to it. ■ Think about taking in lodgers if your home is big enough. ■ Do not hand the keys in if you have fallen behind. You will still be the legal owner and liable for payments.

Trust sector discounts widen

DISCOUNTS have widened in the investment trust sector over the month in response to the falls in world stock markets and the avalanche of new trust shares being issued.

County Nat West Woodhouse figures show that the sector's discount to net assets widened to 13.1 per cent in June from 14.3 per cent in May, and below 12 per cent in March.

When discounts widened, share prices fell even though the trusts' portfolios may have risen their values. In fact, in June share prices declined around the world - the FT-4 All Share fell 1.4 per cent and the FT World Index 1.5 per cent - as investors were hit with a "double whammy" effect.

In the early part of the year, explains David Aaron, analyst at Barclays in London, Wedd, "institutions held back and wanted to put funds quickly into the market when it fell." Investment trusts were a quick way to do so.

Recently, however, says Aaron, the market has been more volatile and the torrent of new investment trusts has meant that institutions have had all the chance they need to put more money into the sector. Demand for trust shares has slackened and the discount has widened again.

Stephen Magrath, an analyst at County NatWest Woodhouse, says that the sector has been particularly hit in the Japanese and Far Eastern markets. However, private investors need not necessarily be discouraged. New trust discounts are not around historical levels, investment trusts have done better than they did a few months ago.

Meanwhile, fund managers are looking for a private investor's selection. Kleinwort Benson is now hoping to raise between £100m and £150m - up from £100m in 1989 - for its High Income Trust. The trust has a split capital structure with ordinary shares and zero dividend preference shares.

The ordinary shares have an initial dividend yield of 10 per cent, while the zero dividend shares are designed to have a redemption yield of 11.5 per cent.

Split capital trusts are also on offer from Gartmore and Murray Johnstone, while County NatWest is launching a smaller company.

Two more exotic trusts are on offer from GT - into Japanese emerging companies - and from Robert Fleming - into emerging markets world-trusts. Both offer small shareholders exposure into little covered by other investment trusts.

One of the investors behind the trusts is Graham House Investment Trust. The trust's assets per share had an increase of 83 per cent in 1990, and the shares fell from 150p on Monday morning to 140p by the end of the week.

Normally investment trusts should not suffer from a market slump but Graham House was an unusual case which specialised in smaller companies and property development. Both sectors have suffered particularly in the recession, and two key companies in the trust's portfolio - Granada and Entertainment Corporation - were in receivership. Meanwhile, one investment trust has disappeared from the market - First Tokyo Index Trust. The trust was converted into an indexed fund in January 1989, managed by London & Malabar Holdings, a fund management company owned principally by Robert Maxwell and Lord Donoghue.

Unfortunately, the Tokyo First Index Trust, which the trust set up to match and not performed very well and shareholders, are offered a roughly equivalent to 131p, compared with a price of 187p when the trust originally started to trade.

Indexed investment trusts may well have a future, but they need a bull market to serve their best interests.

Philip Coggan

JAPAN

NO SERIOUS INVESTOR SHOULD IGNORE ITS GROWTH POTENTIAL

The Japanese economy has been an impressive performer for over 4 decades. It has grown quite phenomenally and, even during the world recession Japan's rate of economic growth is expected to be over 3% by the end of 1991 - one of the highest in the world.

Added to this, inflation is expected to fall within the next four months close to 2% and experts believe there is scope for a rise in both short and long term interest rates.

The long term performance of the Japanese stock market has also been impressive. And although it had a sharp fall last year, and has suffered some recent turbulence, it is making a strong recovery.

We believe that Japan looks set to outpace most of the world recession faster and more dynamically than the other major economies of the world.

Certainly it is an opportunity that a serious investor should ignore and the Prosper Japan Growth Fund could be a well-placed way of tapping the undoubted potential of Japan.

REWARDING INVESTORS WELL

Prosper Japan Growth Fund was launched over 20 years ago and was one of the first ever UK unit trusts to invest exclusively in Japan.

Prosper is part of Flemings, and is able to call on the Far East expertise of the company, Jardine Fleming.

Flemings are an international investment management group who currently manage over £27 billion worldwide.

Since its launch the Fund has rewarded investors well. The value of the fund has risen from £1,000 invested in Japan Growth Fund at various periods to £3d July 1991 with the average annual growth of each. Since 2nd January 1991 year to 2nd July 1991 the performance of the Fund has been particularly impressive - with the offer price of a unit in the Fund rising 31.2%.

LONG TERM GROWTH LOOKS ASSURED

Japan's long term growth looks assured; exports are already up 8% year on year and growing. This in turn is likely to provide an additional boost to GNP with companies in electrical and high technology sectors standing to benefit.

New product development has always been one of Japan's strengths and now is no exception. Companies like Canon, Mitsubishi, Nissan, Hitachi and Toshiba have invested heavily in research and, with a new generation of many familiar digital products on the way, are well placed to take advantage of what could be a technology boom similar to that of the 1970s.

WHY YOU SHOULD ACT NOW

We believe that Japan offers the serious investor an opportunity that should not be ignored. And, as the yen continues to strengthen against sterling any returns made on your investment in the next 12 months could be enhanced by currency gains, which we believe could be as much as 10-15% for investors who act now.

BONUS

And if we receive your investment on or later than 1st July 1991 you will get a bonus of 10 EXTRA UNITS FREE on lump sum investments of £2,000 and over.

You can invest in the Prosper Japan Growth Fund with a lump sum of just £1,000, or save regularly from as little as £35 a month.

Talk to your financial adviser, fill in the coupon for more information or call us free on 0800 282 101.

CALL FREE 0800 282 101

9.00 a.m. - 5.30 p.m. 7 DAYS A WEEK

JAPAN-GROWTH-FUND

To: Save & Prosper Group Limited, FREEPOST, Romford RM1 1BR.

Please send me details about Japan Growth Fund
I would like details of investing monthly ☐ exchanging shares I already hold for an investment in Japan Growth ☐

Surname _____ Initials _____

Mr/Ms/Miss _____

Address _____

Postcode _____

Home Tel (STD Code) _____ No Work Tel (STD Code) _____ No

THE PRICE OF UNITS AND THE INCOME FROM THEM MAY GO DOWN AS WELL AS UP. PAST PERFORMANCE IS NOT A GUARANTEE OF FUTURE SUCCESS. FOREIGN EXCHANGE FLUCTUATIONS CAN HAVE AN EFFECT ON THE VALUE OF YOUR INVESTMENT. SAVE & PROSPER GROUP LTD. IS A MEMBER OF IARD AND LAUTRO.

1% BONUS
UNITS AVAILABLE 'TIL 26th JULY

SAVE & PROSPER

THE INVESTMENT HOUSE

Investor compensation rules in disarray

INVESTOR compensation is in greater disarray than ever, following the High Court ruling on the correct construction of Section 54 of the Financial Services Act, according to specialist lawyers.

They warn investors against a false sense of security over the court decision that compensation scheme cover should start from December 18 1986.

But they also offer some reassurance to customers of failed firms adversely affected by the decision. Their fight for compensation can go on, even if no appeal is lodged by the July 19 deadline or if all parties to the construction case decide against an appeal.

Mr Justice Morritt reasoned that since the compensation scheme was established to compensate liabilities incurred in respect of investment business, the date when investment business was first legally defined: December 18 1986.

A firm can incur liability at different times and in various ways, for example by giving bad advice, issuing false statements or stealing money.

Under the rules of the compensation scheme, bad advice is only covered either from August 18 1986 (when the scheme began) or from the date when the firm was fully authorised, if that was later. The judgment had no effect on the rules.

So December 18 1986 is not the date for compensation but anyone who received bad advice between then and August 28 1986.

This was keenly felt by investors who during that period put money into "fake bonds" issued by Denis Dale-Greaves. They were refused compensation on the grounds that although the fake bonds were investments, issuing them did not constitute investment business. Selling the bonds to the investors ranked as giving investment advice, but predated August 28 1986, so was barred from cover. The investors had been hoping for a ruling that there should be no date limit on cover from the compensation scheme.

A lawyer familiar with the workings of the scheme said a further category of investor could be effectively cut out of cover. These would be people who invested and unknowingly had money stolen before December 18 1986.

If after that the firm issued a false statement, the scheme would base compensation on the money the investor would have been able to recover from the firm if he had realised immediately that the statement was false. If the firm had been "unable to pay" (not necessarily technically insolvent) when it issued the false statement, the investor could not be compensated. Identifying the points at which a failed firm had been able or unable to pay would be extremely difficult.

"The court decision in my preliminary view causes more difficulties in terms of interpretation than it resolves," said solicitor David Pine, whose firm Alexander Tatham represents investors in three failed firms: Dunsdale, Robert Carter and Hamilton House.

The next stage is for the four parties to the construction case to decide whether to appeal. They are the Securities and Investments Board, the compensation scheme, Fimbra (the Financial Intermediaries Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association) and Linda Kelsey, a Dunsdale investor put forward as a representative investor by SIB.

Pine added that there might be no point in appealing because the court had been asked the wrong question in the first place. "With hindsight, the way this was done was misconceived," he said.

Since the court had not made a representative order, no other investors will be bound by Kelsey's decision if she chooses not to appeal. "We could have mother go," said Pine, explaining that the possibilities included going for some sort of judicial review or consideration of the rules of the compensation scheme and that the July 19 appeal deadline would not apply to any of this. "All is not lost," he said.

Barbara Ellis

YOU WORK HARD... DOES YOUR MONEY?
High yielding investment opportunities available
Capital growth and good returns Interested?
Call 0635 232 536 ref PWB

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

The Smart Saver

The problems of rich squirrels

Scheherazade Daneshku on where to stash away £1,000 a month

ANYONE WHO can afford to save £1,000 a month might seem to have few problems. But the more there is to save, the greater the range of choices — the harder to decide between investments.

There is the fear of being pushed into unsuitable policies by those earning high commission, the fear that the money is not being saved in the most tax-efficient way and the worry that inflation — the greatest enemy of all — will eat into the diligently-saved cash.

The best strategy is not to take out too many policies — this will entail duplicating charges and needs. Decide too whether you seek primarily income or capital growth and keep a certain amount in an instant access high-interest building society account for the day the roof falls in.

Anyone with the ability to save £1,000 per month is likely to be a higher rate taxpayer in whose interests it will be to seek the most tax-efficient investments.

We emphasised last week the benefits of a Pep (personal equity plan) for the £200 a month saver. The person who has five times this amount to save every month should certainly think seriously about taking out a Pep. Potential gains at the level should now far outweigh the initial costs.

The income from the shares in which the Pep is invested is free of income tax and there is no capital gains tax to pay once the shares are sold, making it even more attractive for the higher rate taxpayer.

Indeed, a Pep is regarded by the Labour party as such a lucrative tax-free advantage that it is highly likely to disappear should Labour win the next election.

The range of choices at this level is greater. Last week, we looked at Peps in the form of unit trusts and individual shares. Both showed their potential suitability as long-term investments (10 years) than more shorter periods.

However, the stock market buff may want to play the market himself with a Pep. In which you choose the companies you want to invest in. A number of companies offer a self-select Pep: you will enjoy tax advantages through your capital allowances.

You can make up to £1,000 in capital gains — and £11,000 if you are married — in the present tax year without paying CGT. You can also claim indexation — both the original and of your shares — and any increase in value will be increased in line with the Retail Prices Index (RPI) when calculating the gain. This means that if you sell a number of shares before CGT is payable on the non-Pep equities, you will still have the lump sum in zero dividend shares of a trust, which will provide relatively steady capital growth. These are reasonably attractive investments which will have out one each. If you are unmarried and want to invest more than £1,000 in equities, John Cobb of Sheppard's, the private client stockbroker, points out that you can still enjoy tax advantages through your capital allowances.

You can make up to £1,000 in capital gains — and £11,000 if you are married — in the present tax year without paying CGT. You can also claim indexation — both the original and of your shares — and any increase in value will be increased in line with the Retail Prices Index (RPI) when calculating the gain. This means that if you sell a number of shares before CGT is payable on the non-Pep equities, you will still have the lump sum in zero dividend shares of a trust, which will provide relatively steady capital growth. These are reasonably attractive investments which will have first claim on the basis of an investment trust when it is wound up. Any gain will be classed as capital gains for tax purposes, not income.

Pensions are another tax-efficient investment. Again, there is a long-term investment policy but one which is particularly attractive to those who are approaching retirement, as you can make additional voluntary contributions (AVCs) of up to 15 per cent of their annual income.

AVCs are treated in the same way as ordinary contributions to a pension, that is, they obtain top rate relief. Higgins warns that the cheapest way to do this is again by making regular contributions: "Signing a direct debit for an insurance company pension scheme means that the company will apply all the forthcoming years' charges in this year's tax year and will pay commission on the basis." He advises saving the cash during the year and making a single contribution at the end of the tax year.

Some companies will match extra contributions with some of their own, although it is as well to check whether AVCs will go into the general pension fund, in which case you may not be able to claim the full benefit or whether they will be in your own name.

An alternative is to have a free-standing AVC from a life company or other provider. The FSAVC allows you to choose where to place your investment, you may decide that you can afford to go for a higher-risk investment given that this is a top-up pension for a pension that is otherwise secure.

The charges on a FSAVC will be higher than on an in-house scheme but, on the other hand, it is a portable scheme, should you decide to change jobs.

Finally, although the chance might be small, make sure that you do not "overcontribute" and exceed the 15 per cent limit. The pensions rules apply which means that this year you cannot contribute more than 15 per cent of £71,400. Extra AVCs will be returned to you only on retirement after a tax deduction.

Another scheme which may appeal to higher-rate taxpayers are single premium investment bonds. They can be useful for the higher-rate taxpayer who has not used up his or her capital gains allowance, since 5 per cent of the value of the bonds can be withdrawn each year and the tax charge deferred until the entire bond is cashed in.

This ability to defer higher rate tax should prove particularly attractive to higher-rate taxpayers who fear a Labour government. However, investors should remember that the income element of investment bonds may only be achieved by eating up their capital. And the tax treatment of insurance funds is not as favourable as that for unit trusts, so their performance will be less good in the long term.

Investors looking for short-term saving measures could put funds into an off-shore deposit account to allow the interest to accumulate gross. If your pension does not work, you can use up their personal allowance (£3,285 in 1991-92), which at current interest rates, allows scope for savings of around £1,000.

The National Savings Yearly Plan offers a fixed rate of interest of 8.5 per cent. To get this rate, you would have to invest the monthly maximum of £200 for a year and hold the plan for another four years, when the proceeds would be totally tax-free.

To counter inflation, £10,000 a year could buy you index-linked national savings certificates or index-linked gilts. The former pay 4.5 per cent and inflation-linked if held for five years, the latter are currently yielding around 4 per cent and inflation if held till redemption and are free of CGT.

Finally, it is as well not to forget a tax-exempt special savings account into which you can put £3,000 in the first year, and then £1,000 in each of the next four years, to earn tax-free interest of 8.5 per cent after 5 years. These are losing part of their allure as interest rates drop but they do provide an absolutely tax-free way of saving.

DIRECTORS' SHARE TRANSACTIONS IN THEIR OWN COMPANIES (LISTED IN US$)
Company	Shares	Value	No of directors
SALES
Berkley Group	621,000	1,975	4
Hambro	100,000	284	1
Hazlewood Foods	250,000	458	1
Henderson Admin	24,500	148	4
Huntleigh Tech	45,000	108	1
Int Comm & Data	375,000	83	1
Ladbroke	674,000	1,725	3
Marina Devel	162,000	332	1
Mortgage Asset Mgmt	10,000	71	1
NMC	50,000	34	1
QS Holdings	380,000	758	1
Sims Foods	1,002,928	2,878	1
Steel Bullitt Jones	85,000	250	2
Tate & Lyle	20,334	77	1
Wagen Inc	65,000	335	1
Wair Group	41,811	141	1
Willis Coroon	68,055	170	1
PURCHASES
Henderson Admin	5,000	30	1
Int Comm & Data	375,000	83	4
New Zealand Inv Tel	100,000	83	1
NSM	1,500,000	210	2
Seatchi (ADR's)	505,000	8443	1
CP	48,000	83	2

THE trend in director transactions has been reversed. After several months where sellers outnumbered buyers, there were 1.7 buys to every sale during June. The most heavily bought sector is engineering with the most heavily sold being insurance brokers.

The share price of NSM, a building materials and energy company, has lost nine tenths of its value over the last two years, with recent results showing a collapse in profits. Seven directors held in total less than 15,000 shares all the way down, but these two purchases display confidence in the company.

Dr Tom Russell of Seatchi & Seatchi, another company to have fallen from grace, has bought the equivalent of 1.8m ordinary shares.

The shares of Berkeley Group showed a downturn in the housing market in 1989, and have subsequently more than doubled. When directors deal on this scale and in unison their lead is usually well worth following. Ron Randall, chief executive of Sims Foods, is to retire at the end of the month, and the sale shown in our list reduces his holding by half.

The building for the future.

One building has the capacity and expertise to cover practically any risk worldwide.

It's not a market, not a company, that has developed for over 300 years by looking forward, not back.

Today, it commands a massive international presence, with aggregate resources of more than £17 billion — offering unrivalled security for both the everyday and the extraordinary.

One in six cars in the UK is insured there. Likewise, a substantial share of the markets for big and specialised risks.

With the balance of risk and reward likely to become more realistic — over £100 million in the latest information systems — its market leadership is confidently assured. Confirming Lloyd's as a landmark; not just in the City, but in the international world of insurance for generations to come.

Your route to Lloyd's unique expertise is through a Lloyd's broker.

For further information, please call in or write to The Information Office, ground floor, Lloyd's of London, One Lime Street, London EC3M 7HA.

LLOYD'S

LLOYD'S OF LONDON

LLOYD'S
The name that covers the Earth.

FIDELITY — THE WORLD'S INVESTMENT MANAGER

Changed Jobs? Don't Forget Your Old Pension.

If you've ever changed jobs, the pension you've left behind could probably be working harder for you.

By transferring your existing pension arrangements to Fidelity:

- You could substantially increase your retirement benefits at no extra cost.
- Your capital will be actively managed by investment professionals whose aim is to provide you with as large a pension fund as possible.
- With Fidelity, you benefit from the investment experience and expertise of the world's largest independent fund management organisation.

Build For a Better Retirement With Fidelity.

For more information about Fidelity Select Personal Pensions, talk to your Independent Financial Adviser, Callfree Fidelity InvestorLine on 0800 414191 (we're available from 9am to 9pm, 7 days a week), or return the coupon.

Full Name Mr/Mrs/Miss _____
(Please print name clearly)

Address _____

Postcode _____ Tel. No. _____

Best Code FTA

Fidelity Investments

FINANCE AND THE FAMILY

Diary of a Private Investor

Trapped in a BES after five bad years

SEVERAL promoters of expansion schemes have recently sounded rather defensive about their activities.

For example, last month I received a copy of Johnson Fry's latest BES bulletin, the front page of which was headlined "You Can't Please All the People, All the Time".

It featured a "Mr A" who had complained that he had "lost money on four of our companies that have gone bust. No mention of the other 10 he holds that haven't or the fact that he 'chose' the four to invest in. We accept this as part of life. What we are not prepared to accept is the further comments that this shows you are not interested in your individual investors and, what is more, spend all your time emphasising your successes and ignoring your failures. Nothing could be further from the truth. We exist 'only' to look after our investors."

In 1986 I invested in a BES company, Hotel Apartments, sponsored by Johnson Fry. It was formed to provide quality suites in areas of central London. The first property bought by the company met planning problems and in 1986 a circular to investors stated that the property would be sold at a price which would produce "a profit, possibly substantial, to the company." It had also bought the Alexander Hotel in Kensington.

I had thought that I would see some return on my investment last year, having held the BES shares for a full five years and since Johnson Fry had written to me on November 1 1985 stating that the offer to for shares had closed on October 22 that year. Unfortunately, in March last year Johnson Fry said that because of "some later investment in March 1986, the five-year period for all BES is not completed until the end of March 1991." However, the company's two hotels had been sold and the company had more than £1.5m in deposit.

I therefore looked forward to a pay out in April this year, even though it was unlikely to be much more than my original, gross investment.

In May, Johnson Fry said payment had not been made in April because the board of Hotel Apartments (which included Charles Fry) had "been examining alternative wanted cash, while 40 per cent wanted the hotels bought back. According to Johnson Fry's bulletin, they do will "upset at least 40 per cent shareholders" - especially as they had received comments ranging from "give me the money now or I'll report to you to every regulatory authority in the country" to "I didn't invest for tax relief, I invested in a business and you continue if you can get such a good deal."

Cash is expected to be out this month. At least I hope it is.

This seems to highlight many investors appear to have overlooked when they originally invested in the BES. They appreciated the risk that they might lose all their money (hence the need for tax relief), but they thought that after the five-year period were up it would be a relatively simple matter to cash in their investment. It is not.

For some BES sponsors, winding up a BES fund have proved a time-consuming and difficult process finding buyers for their holdings in an assortment of companies.

For example, I invested in the Britannia 1983-4 BES which attracted total funds of just under £1.5m. The fund invested in 10 companies. Of those companies, three went into receivership, one was successfully floated on the stock market, and the fund managed to sell its holding in three of the companies in 1989. The proceeds from the sale of the three remaining shareholdings was received earlier this year.

The result was that for every £1,000 the fund had invested, £1,000 was produced only £770.12p. But that is better than some funds of that period. One wonders whether all the people who flocked to invest into assured tenancy BES companies have remembered that, at the end of five years, it may prove difficult (particularly if there is a Labour government) to remove all the tenants and/or to sell the properties at a good profit.

Investing in a business expansion scheme is not just about taking advantage of tax rates - but accepting certain degrees of risks and the possibility of being locked into an investment.

Kevin

Goldstein-Jackson

The longer-term lessons of the top ten funds

we published six months ago. Since then, Capability Income's Growth has climbed into eighth place.

None of the three funds, however, has that impressive a record in the short term, and their high ranking depends largely on their excellent performance in the early 1980s.

The two Bishopsgate funds, International and Progressive, were also in the list six months ago, although they are drifting down the rankings. Bishopsgate is part of the Rothschild Group.

UK funds dominate the list, with six out of the ten best performers. Admittedly the great movement to specialisation occurred after July 1, 1981 - the starting date for this table.

But when one considers the fact that the two Bishopsgate funds are international generalists, the table still illustrates the attractions of broadly-based funds to long-term investors.

Single country funds are more likely to dominate the shorter term tables, but will be more volatile over the longer term.

Philip Coggan

THE BEST RATES FOR YOUR MONEY

Account	Telephone	National	Minimum	Rate	Int. paid
INVESTMENT A/Cs and BONDS (Gross)
Southdown BS	0273 471871	Instant	£1,000	11.15%	Y/Y
Cheltenham & Gloucester	0452 372372	Instant	£2,500	12.25%	Y/Y
Allied Trust Bank	071 828 0879	2 Mth	£2,001	12.57%	Y/Y
Norwich & Peterborough BS	0733 371371	85 Day	£10,000	11.85%	Y/Y
National Counties BS	0372 742211	90 Day	£25,000	12.85%	Y/Y
Lambeth BS	071 925 1381	2 Yr Term Share	£500	12.90%	Y/Y
Bradford & Bingley	071 925 1381	1 Year	£25,000	12.90%	Y/Y
TESSAs (Tax Free)
National Counties	0372 742211	5 Year	£5,000	14.80%	Y/Y
Exeter Bank	0303 50855	1 Year	£5,000	14.80%	Y/Y
West Bromwich BS	021 525 7070	5 Year	£150	14.00%	Y/Y
Cheltenham & Gloucester	071 925 1381	5 Year	£20	14.00%	Y/Y
HIGH INTEREST CURRENT A/Cs (Gross)
Caledonian Bank	081 658 8285	Instant	£1,000	11.50%	Y/Y
National Mortgage Bank	021 712 2801	Instant	£2,000	11.50%	Y/Y
Cheltenham & Gloucester	0342 621381	Instant	£10,000	11.80%	Y/Y
Northern Rock BS	081 285 7181	Instant	£25,000	11.87%	Y/Y
OFFSHORE ACCOUNTS (Gross)
Leeds Permanent Overseas Ltd	0824 828285	Instant	£20,000	12.20%	Y/Y
C & G Channel Islands Ltd	0800 717555	Instant	£10,000	12.55%	Y/Y
Bradford & Bingley Douglas	0824 828285	80 Day	£5,000	11.50%	Y/Y
Yorkshire BS Jersey	0451 711111	180 Day	£20,000	12.80%	Y/Y
C & G Channel Islands Ltd	0800 717555	12 Mth	£10,000	12.25%	OM
GUARANTEED INCOME BONDS (Net)
American Life FN	081 880 7183	1 Year	£20,000	9.20%	Y/Y
OCL Assurance FN	081 782 0200	2 Year	£25,000	8.50%	Y/Y
Prosperity Financial FN	0800 824546	3 Year	£2,000	9.80%	Y/Y
AEON FN	071 938 8800	5 Year	£20,000	9.45%	Y/Y
Liberty Life FN	081 440 8210	5 Year	£100	9.80%	Y/Y
SAY SAVINGS A/Cs & BONDS (Gross)
Investment A/C	Instant	1 Mth	£5	11.00%	Y/Y
Income Bonds	Instant	1 Mth	£2,000	11.75%	Y/Y
Capital Bonds C	Instant	1 Mth	£100	11.00%	Y/Y
SAY SAVINGS CERTIFICATES (Tax Free)
8th Issue	Instant	5 Year	£25	8.50%F	OM
8th Index Linked	Instant	5 Year	£25	4.50%L	OM
Childrens Bond	Instant	5 Year Bonus	£25	11.54%	OM

Who owns our little graveyard?

SIXTY-TWO years ago we bought a disused chapel building for use as a farm store. The tiny burial ground (about three graves) was retained by the vendors. The whole area was and has been totally enclosed by a high wall and the public have been excluded (with no complaints) ever since.

We should like to sell but have been unable to discover any authority capable of acting as vendor for the burial ground. (After 60 years I would have thought we had acquired this?) The original religious denomination was General Baptist. Can you suggest anyone we could contact in order to clarify our position please.

As you do not appear to have made any use of the burial ground for your own benefit it may be difficult to set up a claim to have acquired title by adverse possession. The land is therefore probably still vested in the Baptist Trust Corporation as successor to one or other of the Baptist trustees listed in the Charities (Baptist Congregational and Unitarian Churches and Presbyterian Church of England) Regulations, 1961 (SI 1961 No 1261).

You should enquire of that Corporation - address: Baptist House, 129 Broadway, Didcot Oxon - or of the Congregational Federation Limited of that enquiry is unfruitful.

The silent Revenue

I HELP my daughter with her tax affairs. She has held various appointments in the public service and has been deducted from her salary. She was an elected member of a local authority and received attendance allowances from which tax was also deducted before payment. Claims have been made in respect of various expenses incurred in connection with her small work and a refund of tax was made for the tax year 1986-87.

We have been advised of income for all subsequent years accompanied by claims for expenses but no response of any kind has been made by the Revenue. We have not have replied to letters sent in October 1990 and January and April 1991. Of course the Revenue owes her money - not the other way round!

How do I secure a reply? Is there any appeal system to ensure the Revenue pay attention to a legitimate claim?

Ordinarily, we should suggest that your daughter first write to the District Inspector (marking both the letter and the envelope "For the attention of the District Inspector") and then, if no satisfactory response arrives within ten days, to the Inland Revenue regional office which covers her tax district. Only then, if there were still no satisfactory action, would we recommend that she write to her MP, in accordance with the Inland Revenue's suggestion in the Taxpayer's Charter.

However, with the long summer recess nearly upon us, we recommend she writes at once to her MP. In our experience, letters in House of Commons envelopes receive special attention at even the most sleepy tax offices.

The House of Commons postcode is SW1A 0AA.

A late demand

I HAVE just received a tax demand for year ending 5 April 1990. The tax return was submitted on 22 May 1990. Tax return was submitted on time more than a year ago. Do I have a case for waiver of payment due to my long time-lapse for demand of payment by the Inland Revenue. You have nothing to lose

Q&A BRIEFCASE

We accept responsibility for the accuracy of the information given in these columns. All queries will be answered by post as soon as possible.

by asking for relief under extra-statutory concession A19 (Arrears of tax arising through official error), but we doubt whether you satisfy the reasonable-belief condition imposed by the Inland Revenue.

If you have not seen the booklet of extra-statutory concessions (B1), with updating supplements) or the Taxpayer's Charter issued by the Government, ask your office for copies. They are both free. Or you could find copies in a local reference library in for example, Home's Taxes or the British Tax Encyclopedia.

VIAG

1990: ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Following record results in 1989, VIAG continued its dynamic expansion in 1990. Group earnings surged 27 percent to DM 336 million. In addition to VIAG's traditional divisions - Energy, Aluminium, and Chemicals - the Trading and Services, Refractories and Advanced Ceramics, and the Glass Divisions were fully consolidated for the first time. As a result, Group sales soared to DM 19.4 billion in 1990 from DM 10.4 billion in 1989. Investments nearly doubled in 1990 to DM 2.3 billion.

SEVENTH CONSECUTIVE DIVIDEND INCREASE

In view of the Group's excellent performance in 1990 a dividend increase to DM 8.50 per share will be proposed at the Annual General Meeting in Bonn on July 10, 1991. This will be the seventh consecutive dividend increase.

1991: FULL-YEAR PROFIT RISE EXPECTED AFTER WEAKER 1st QUARTER

In the first quarter 1991, results for the VIAG Group were not up to expectations in all areas. For the full year 1991, however, an overall increase in Group net profit can be expected again.

GROUP SALES UP 13 PERCENT

In the first quarter 1991, worldwide Group sales climbed DM 590 million or 13 percent to DM 5.1 billion. The largest contribution to this increase came from the Energy and Glass Divisions.

HIGH INCREASE IN CAPITAL INVESTMENTS

Capital investments for the VIAG Group grew 44 percent to DM 283 million in the first 1991 quarter from DM 197 million in the same year-earlier period. The strongest increase occurred in the Aluminium and Glass Divisions. Large-scale investments included expansion of the electricity grid in the Energy Division as well as the construction of an aluminium smelter in Canada and an expansion of rolling capacities in the Aluminium Division. In the Glass Division, the main focus was on the expansion of capacities for container glass, by the construction of new glass vans.

For the current year, a substantial increase in investments is planned: they will reach more than DM 1.5 billion by year-end.

ACQUISITIONS ENHANCE DIVERSIFICATION

In May 1991, VIAG concluded an agreement with the Kiewit Group of the U.S. for the purchase of the Continental Can Europe Group. With sales of around DM 3 billion, Continental Can Europe is one of Europe's leading packaging materials manufacturers, employing approximately 10,000 people in more than 30 factories. This places VIAG among the biggest packaging companies in Europe, with a product range covering all types of environmentally sound materials.

Strategic acquisitions were also made by other companies of the VIAG Group.

MORE THAN 56,000 EMPLOYEES WORLDWIDE

As of March 31, 1991, the VIAG Group employed some 56,300 people - 12 percent more than at March 31, 1990. By the end of the current year, the workforce is expected to increase to roughly 65,000 as a result of company acquisitions.

OUTLOOK POSITIVE FOR 1991

VIAG is on a successful path and profits for the year 1991 as a whole are expected to show continued growth.

For further information, please contact:

VIAG
AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT
Georg-von-Böckler-Strasse 1
D-5300 Bonn 1, Germany
Telefax 2 28 / 5 22 21 22

THE POWER PACK.

As Europe's biggest most powerful companies jostle for position ■ take advantage of the new markets of 1992 and an expanding Europe – who's moved up the rankings, and at whose expense?

The "Financial Times European 500" gives you a clear, comprehensive picture of business in Europe.

Now published in book form, it is ■ permanent reference for the most useful listings of Europe's top 500 companies – including a separate list of the top UK 500.

The lists give you the pecking order, but just as importantly our incisive analysis and FT comment.

We explain the reasons behind moves in the tables and the significance of the more dramatic ones.

The report also includes an invaluable list of the company addresses, telephone, facsimile and telex numbers and the name of their Chairman or Chief Executive.

Now in its ninth year, the "FT European 500" will be more useful than ever if you are doing business in Europe. To order copies of the "FT European 500" use the coupon provided.

John White, Financial Times Limited, No. 1 Southwark Bridge, London SE1 9HL, United Kingdom.

To: John White, Financial Times Limited, No. 1 Southwark Bridge, London SE1 9HL, United Kingdom. Fax: London (71) 873 3072

Yes, I would like ☐ copies of the FT European 500, priced at £22 sterling per copy, inclusive of postage.

Please charge to my: American Express ☐ Mastercard ☐ Access ☐ Visa ☐

Card Number Card expiry date

Name Title

Company Tel

Address

I authorise the Financial Times to debit my account by £22 sterling.

Signature
(No order accepted without a signature)

Date
Offer valid until 31 July 1991.

FINANCIAL TIMES
EUROPE'S BUSINESS NEWSPAPER

Now published in book form.

BOOKS

Julian Barnes, Angela Carter, James Buchan... as the holiday season approaches, our critics take a look at the latest summer fiction

A latter-day 'Jules et Jim'

IT IS the oldest story in the world. At any rate, one of them. Two boys, companions fall in love with the same woman. The most celebrated modern treatment is Henri-Pierre Roché's novel published in 1953, Jules et Jim, known universally through 'Prufrock's' 1962 film with Jeanne Moreau. She played Catherine who 'marries' Jules, who can't hold her, and, in despair, he encourages Jim's interest in her. "That way she'll still be ours," (Pauline Kael).

Julian Barnes, who makes careful references to the film, uses the same plot in a 1980s London setting in Talking It Over. First, question - how does this fit in with Barnes's previous work? It follows logically from the half chapter in his last book, A History of the World in 10 1/2 Chapters. In the half-chapter, Barnes switched from all these 'freaking' inter-linked accounts of ocean-crossings, shipwrecks and survivors to dry land. The narrator was observed curled up in bed ashore, kissing the nape of his wife's neck, wondering at some length what it is that people actually mean when they talk about being in love.

Barnes is not the first highly

TALKING IT OVER
by Julian Barnes
Jonathan Cape £13.99, 273 pages

so on. Here he does it with a former only child in a one-parent family who becomes a social worker for a short while and is now a picture-restorer. She is Gillian, the heroine. What she at first imagines is meant by being in love turns out to be merely the satisfaction of her perfectly understandable need for security.

This protective security is egregious Oliver, Stuart's best friend from school, a sponger and non-achiever, occasionally employed as a teacher of English, one of those straight who is plus ça change the less. Two examples of his vocabulary must suffice: "getting drunk" is "being stinko-paralytic" and "having sex" is "rumpy-pumpy". Presumably expressions like this are meant to sound affected and dated. Anyway, Barnes keeps up this lingo for and pages and pages.

The trio holds its

and other penetrating Gallic sages have uttered on the subject of love and marriage as well as giving us the benefit of her own practical experience. In the end it is Oliver who takes over Gillian - not as in Roché by consent, nor as in earlier accounts such as The Knight's Tale before marriage, but just after.

Yes, that is Barnes's hideous little twist to the plot. Oliver's courtship of Gillian actually begins at Heathrow on her return from her honeymoon with Stuart. Was ever woman in this humour wooed? Was ever man in this humour wooed? The answer to that is a double yes.

Is this one of Barnes's best books? No. It is a long short story, painful in the extreme, not entirely plausible, but, as always, he makes you in doubt whatever about what he is trying to do. He follows his tedious trio through to their bitter ends, leaving us a sense of the outrageous price that has to be paid for any permanent acquisition of emotional maturity. In spite of there being a distinct sense of let-down after 10 1/2, you will need to read it.

Anthony Curtis

Drugs and thugs

WHEN are people to notice Louis de Bernières? His first novel was published with barely a ripple. Now he is back again with Senor Vivo & the Coca Lord, which is every bit as good as his first book. He is sharp, funny, engaging and British. What is against him perhaps is that he writes about South America: there's a hint too of magical realism in his work, a voilà which surely had its day. But don't be put off by that.

His subject is Colombia, drug culture of the Medellín cartels. He sets the story in a fictional country, but the real life parallels are obvious. The coca lord is a horrendous thing whose minions rape, murder and mutilate at his command. The only person brave enough to stand up to them is Senor Vivo, a young philosophy lecturer who denounces drugs in a series of letters to the newspaper and becomes a national hero. So much so that he has to be rubbed out.

What follows is a farcical series of murder attempts, each more incompetent than the last. The coca lord's followers Vivo everywhere, doing best to kill him by every means imaginable. They

SENOR VIVO & THE COCA LORD
by Louis de Bernières
Warburg £14.99, 200 pages

MIDDLE PASSAGE
by Charles Johnson
Pleasure £14.99, 209 pages

SLIDE
by James Buchan
Helmman £12.99, 133 pages

DAY OF ATONEMENT
by A Alvarez
Cape £13.99, 311 pages

behave much as the van Heerden's police did in Sliding. They are, indeed, de Bernières is doing for Colombia's drug culture what Tom Sharpe did for apartheid. His approach is flippant, but the purpose behind it is deadly serious. Not everybody will enjoy his joke style, but those who do will enjoy it immensely.

They ought to enjoy Middle Passage as well, a fine novel by the American author Charles Johnson. It is a seafaring yarn of the 1830s, written almost as a pastiche of Melville, and narrated by Rutherford Calhoun, a freed slave anxious to escape a woman, who has stowed away on the first ship out of New Orleans. From the frying pan into the fire, because the ship is a slave, bound for Africa, captained by a dwarf who spends much of his time rogering the cabin boy. Throw in a drunken boatswain, a cook with one foot, a sailor who killed his family with an axe, and it won't be long before there is mutiny on the high seas, and murder too.

It is the slaves who mutiny. Fed up with dying and being thrown overboard, they take matters into their own hands and make an attempt on the ship. Whether they succeed or not, and what part Calhoun plays, is something readers will want to find out for themselves. Suffice it to say that the book is meticulously researched and reads very authentically.

Slide, by James Buchan, charts the moral decline of an Oxford man, drifting towards middle age via a job in the Foreign Office and another as a stockbroker in New York. He smoked pot in his youth, collected porcelain in Iran, held down a series of diplomatic postings in Kiev, Poland and Kuwait, yet without ever really coming to terms with life. He is sacked from Wall Street after 1987, but not before wrapping his car around a tree near the mountain side of the title. The crash has a cathartic effect on him, because it nearly kills his wife and their unborn child...

It's an ambitious tale, very consciously up-market. There is little formal plot as such, but plenty of literary style. He writes very spare, effective prose, strongly reminiscent of Bruce Chatwin's Utz.

Al Alvarez's third novel, Day of Atonement, is altogether more down to earth. It's a thriller set in the affluent Jewish community in north London, narrated alternately by two Constantine, a professional photographer, and his wife Judy. Their best friend Tommy Apple dies suddenly, leaving behind a stolen shipment of cocaine and no clue as to his whereabouts. The police think Joe must have the cocaine. So do the gangsters who threaten his wife. Joe pleads ignorance, but he and Judy are involved whether they like it or not. But are they innocent victims, or is there more to the plot than meets the eye? You will have to read the book.

Nicholas Best

Sanity, madness and unholy innocence

ANGELA CARTER'S Wise Children has four pairs of actor-twins entangled in a plot which out-Shakespeare Shakespeare - bed tricks, mistaken identity, a black, night-climbing Ophelia drowned in the Thames while their showbiz careers speak for our century: hoofing it on the boards, musicals ("What! You will?"), game shows ("or not 2b?").

As in Shakespeare comedy, in Carter-land women intrigue, unite, survive. Dora Chance, celebrating her 75th birthday with twin Nora in their Brixton home in Bard Road (geiddy?) narrates in strong South London patois; actor/managers, father/uncles - no one is legitimate - Ferngrine and Melchior Hazard cut in plummy Olivier-speak. What an English novel this is, with humour steeped in social clashes ("What! You quayle nayce," the Brixton granny orders the entire menu at the Savoy), its nostalgia for soggy songs and gin and cabbage on the boil, its

WISE CHILDREN
by Angela Carter
Corgi £13.99, 311 pages

REGENERATION
by Pat Barker
Viking £13.99, 388 pages

ABSENCE
by Peter Handke
Methuen £13.99

SPIDER
by Patrick McGrath
Viking £13.99, 388 pages

run from Istanbul to Ostend, Iceland are called Europe, and it's hard not to see the motif of 20th century history - the shift of peoples, homelessness, and exile, destruction, villages becoming cities - in Handke's backcloth.

Handke has worked much with films and writes with the cinematic precision of the image-maker. Absence is in scope, but particularised. He catches both physical detail and the existential malaise in his characters. Though he hardly bothers to identify them as people we would recognise, yet we breathe sorrow, relief, joy with them at the end. Among English writers, only John Berger has a sense of modern history and ideas into images as sparse, memorable and moving - and he lives in France.

If Angela Carter is virtuoso technicolour and Barker and Handke shade into grey, Patrick McGrath's Spider is a black hole of a book. Spider's father may have murdered his mother, but Spider has ended up in the mental asylum, and who knows what happened to the 'fat prostitute Hilda' Britain of the 1930s and 1950s hovers across the novel as if seen on a shaky black-and-white screen; most of the time Spider, with McGrath breathing horror horrors down his back, is locked into his own mad world. McGrath's canny twist of plot may either be a nasty joke about the perspective of the insane, or a low trick, according to how you read him, but this thriller's grasp for the peculiar chill of mental anguish interspersed with everyday detail is undeniable.

Jackie Wullschlaeger

Death under the crescent moon

CHRISTINA LAMB writes 'Pakistan third time round' was a sadly depressing place. Waiting for Allah is the author's second book. She made to Pakistan in less than four years - to attend the wedding of Benazir Bhutto in 1987; from 1988 to 1989 as correspondent for this newspaper; and, briefly, in 1990 to update her manuscript after the sudden dismissal of the Bhutto government. Her far-fetched narrative highlights the acute problems of a country with a spiralling population, severe ethnic tensions and a literacy rate on a par with concurring with Bhutto's own assessment, that 'perhaps, her government never had a chance'.

Certainly the army only tolerated Bhutto because of the pressure from the US and the belief that she might bring law and order to a smouldering Sindh. Economically, 'Benazir inherited a government living on borrowed time.' Lamb can throw no new light on the stories of corruption, which were the pretext for the dismissal of the Bhutto government.

The author readily slips into illustrating her text with her own experience, for example, the need to use the influence of 'high-ups' for the repair of a telephone. She has an investigative journalism to its limits, living with doctors (bandits) in rural Sindh and penetrating the underworld of Karachi's slums. Her book becomes pure autobiography when relating her travels with the Mujaheddin into war-torn Afghanistan.

But the book lacks cohesion. Lamb has also made some unnecessary factual errors: 15,000 'British soldiers' were not slaughtered during the retreat from Kabul in 1842. Less than 700 of the retreating army of 4,500 soldiers were Europeans; the rest were Indians with 12,000 camp followers, many of whom died of cold. More pertinently, the US did not cut off military aid after the execution of Zulfikar Ali Bhutto in 1979 but because of suspicions over Pakistan's nuclear programme.

Lamb makes no pretence at being anything other than an outsider. She frequently contrasts more mundane scenarios in Britain with her exploits. 'I had come from reporting knitting exhibitions in Birmingham and gas strikes in Coventry to join the ranks of these, the war correspondents of Peshawar's American club.' Yet, for her, Pakistan also becomes just another assignment. Although distressed at being deported following publication of a controversial article in September 1989 about an attempted military coup against the Bhutto government, she has physically and emotionally moved on. Lamb leaves the reader despondent, thinking of the many of Pakistan's millions whose time it is 'to surrender to death under the crescent moon.' They are no longer waiting for Allah to

WAITING FOR ALLAH
by Christina Lamb
Hamish Hamilton £17.99, 315 pages

RESISTANCE AND CONTROL IN PAKISTAN
by Akbar S. Ahmed
Routledge £12.99, 307 pages

Afghanistan and Bhutto.

Lamb has covered a tremendous amount of ground under her sub-title 'Pakistan's Struggle for Democracy'. She has gone back over 40 years in an attempt to unravel the enigma of a country which so intrigued her at first. 'The whole concept,' she writes of Pakistan's creation in 1947 'was based on the hypocrisy of a few.' She has little sympathy for Pakistan or its leaders. 'Those at the forefront of making the dream happen did not do it for Islam but, like Mohammed Ali Jinnah, a man with a weakness for a drop of whisky and a ham sandwich, to secure their own economic and political ambition.'

Those who favour the theory that Muslims feared the domination of Hindus in a united India will disagree. But she can deny that Pakistan lacks political unity, and province by province the author examines the difficulties of keeping the 'invented nation' intact. Although Benazir Bhutto was responsible for her early interest in Pakistan, Lamb has distanced herself from favouring any of the political protagonists in Pakistan's uneasy struggle for democracy. But she does recognise how hard it was for Benazir to counter the 'entrenched power structures',

Detail of Verrocchio's 'Tobias and the Angel', taken from 'Giotto to Dürer' published by The National Gallery/Yale (£25, p.12.95) to celebrate the opening of the Gallery's Sainsbury Wing solve their problems but for him to deliver them from the heretics of life on earth.

In his book Resistance and Control in Pakistan, Akbar Ahmed has used a different approach from Lamb's multifaceted analysis. He has taken a particular example - that of a Mullah in Waziristan in Pakistan's north-west frontier - in order to throw light on the conflict between tribal custom and the requirements of a modern state. He draws on his own research and practical experience as a Political Agent during 1980s and much of what he says is relevant today. But the book has been badly edited. Interesting information is contained in the notes, whereas the text is irritatingly interrupted by references to sources. Ahmed's study, however, complements Lamb's generalist book and both authors provide an insight into a society where centuries still collide.

Victoria Schofield

Great Game with lamas

EMPIRES, LIKE revolutions, often consume their creators. Francis Younghusband, like Gordon, was a doomed fanatic, driven by a combustible mixture of religion, militarism and sexual repression.

Younghusband's obsession was with the Russian threat to the northern approaches to India, a common enemy and anxiety in the last decades of the 19th century. After Clifton and Sandhurst, he spent his formative years as an officer of the Indian Political Department in Harat and Tonk in Rajasthan, and in Hunza and Chitral, one-year tours by any standard but hot spots in the uneasy buffer zone between two over-extended empires.

Younghusband quickly persuaded himself that the view from his North-West frontier fastnesses gave him an unparalleled insight into the yawning jaws of the great bear. This was the paranoia that had led Alexander 'Bokharan' Burnes to death at the hands of a Kabul mob in the first Afghan war in 1841 and the Ulsterman Louis Cavagnari to a similar fate in the second in 1879.

But whereas these predecessors were possessed of a fear that had some rational basis, Younghusband's nightmare was quite mad. His terror that the enemy might move a great force through the Himalayas concealed a sub-conscious quest for immortality in the Boy's Own Paper.

Younghusband joined the Russophobic strategists in focusing on improbable potential points d'appui such as Dargah, a place so inaccessible that 'travellers were swung along in baskets... suspended from the face of the cliff'. Searching in the snow for footprints of non-existent Russian armies, rather as later explorers chased after the yeti, he wanted, he said, 'to discover the deepest springs of life'.

Younghusband's brief moment in history, his violent incursion into Tibet in 1903-4, was completely unprovoked: Younghusband and his patron, Curzon, spread dark propaganda about Russian influence in the lamaeries, but the worst complaint they could produce was the story that the Dalai Lama was 'cohabiting with a high-bred nun'. By way of setting an example, Younghusband massacred 700 Tibetans at Guru and another 200 at Kala Tsito. The Tibetans resisted feebly, but all they achieved was to catch a Daily Mail correspondent in flagrant; they chopped off his hand, thereby proving themselves aggressive and barbaric. Younghusband with the pretext he sought to demand an indemnity of £500,000 and occupation of the Chumbi valley.

FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND AND THE GREAT GAME
by Anthony Verrier
Jonathan Cape £18, 238 pages

On his return to England Younghusband was feted by the Royal Geographical Society, but the British Government judged his unauthorised exploits an embarrassment. His career came to an abrupt end. He was given a knight-hood - a KCMG, the order that Gladstone had declared suitable for 'Indian clerks'. Condemned to spend the rest of his life in the smoking room of the Travellers' Club, he took refuge in religion. His experiences with 'filthy, lecherous lamas' notwithstanding, he deepened his interest in Buddhism and emerged as head of the World Council of Faiths, an ecumenical Tower of Babel.

Anthony Verrier has used family papers and other sources to tell a story that will already be familiar to readers of Peter Fleming and Peter Hopkirk. The author explains that he has written 'not a biography in the usual sense of the word but rather an evocation of a man's personality and the spirit of his times'. This is intelligent history of an old-fashioned sort. Devotees of the Great Game in central Asia will appreciate it.

Bernard Wasserstein

Poetic illuminations

WALKING ONE day in Boston in 1910, T.S. Eliot saw the streets suddenly shrink and divide. His everyday preoccupations, his past, all the claims of the future fell away and he was engulfed in a great silence. The 22-year-old Eliot, as he said, had had a vision. But did this make him a mystic? When asked this question Eliot always replied that you could be a poet or you could be a mystic, but each was a full-time job. Only St John of the Cross had successfully managed both. To the end of his life, though, as Paul Murray reminds us, Eliot retained a deep if ambivalent interest in mysticism. In March 1917 we even find him sitting on a mat at a gathering of a curious zoo of people known as the Omega Club, discussing mystical research with William Butler Yeats (the only thing he ever talks about except Dublin gossip).

Eliot has been thoroughly de-spiritualised by much recent work. The source-mongers tell us, 'what he read, the psychologists what he repressed. Murray, who is a lecturer in Mystical Theology at the Angelicum University in Rome, treats the poetry, correctly, as a spiritual quest in which Eliot continually attempts to evoke and question the type of momentary illumination he experienced that day in Boston.

What Eliot distrusted was pseudo-spirituality, the type of 'Instant Karma' as popular

T.S. ELIOT AND MYSTICISM
by Paul Murray
Macmillan £40, 326 pages

among the New Age enthusiasts of today as it was among intellectual circles in the 1920s and '30s. He even thought Yeats's verse was compromised by his occult interests. 'No-one can read Mr Yeats's earlier poetry without feeling that the poet was trying to get as a poet something like the exaltation to be obtained, I believe, from... self-induced trance states, calculated symbolism, mediums. Often the verse has an hypnotic charm; but you cannot take heaven by magic.'

Yet, with typical fidelity, Murray shows how Eliot was not averse to incorporating some of Yeats's hypnotic magic into his own verse. It is a siren voice within Eliot's poetic drama, suggesting the closer you get to spiritual reality, the more its false images abound. By returning us to Eliot's interest in the texts of Eastern philosophy and in a host of writers, from Dante to Rupert Brooke and Kipling, all of whom, for Eliot, 'perceive vibrations beyond the range of ordinary men', Murray shows how Eliot received his moments of illumination as much from literature as from his own experience. These chapters are among the best in the book. How often in Kipling's stories, for instance, does one get that sense of another world - and how typical of Eliot, in his remarks about Kipling's 'queer gift of second sight, of transmitting messages from elsewhere' to put his finger on it?

Murray is good at revealing how echoes from these writers haunted Eliot and re-emerged in his verse. In general his readings of the master's own poetic illuminations leave one's understanding enhanced. This is a rich book, which, although dealing with much that is known, turns a sensitivity upon it which one feels is closer to Eliot's own than that of many recent studies.

Mark Archer.

THE HOTTEST LATITUDES

ROBERT FERRIGNO

Comic, erotic and violent - a sensational thriller.

OUT NOW IN SPHERE PAPERBACK

A Member of Maxwell Macmillan Pergamon Publishing Corporation

ARTS

How to save the world from itself?

Global artistic heritage is under attack from human and industrial pollution, says Antony Thorncroft

IT IS not often that you get the chance to save the world, and even though it involved a trip to Rome I was happy to oblige. Most of the acronym known to man had got together to sponsor Media Save Art 91, a good idea that became a yawn.

The argument is faultless. The media have had some success in protecting whales, dolphins, pandas, and such like; perhaps they could be motivated to save the equally threatened global artistic heritage, which is under attack from the human pollution of cultural tourists and the industrial pollution of the environment.

The size of the challenge is gargantuan. In Italy 250,000 objects of art have been stolen in the last 20 years, mainly from churches; the acidity in modern paper has ensured that 90,000 books published between 1875 and 1960 and stored in the National Library in Paris have vanished from the face of the earth; in Italy alone there are 30,000 monuments that need urgent attention and if every desirable conservation project was undertaken it would absorb the entire national budget; of the 900 ancient artifacts created in Mali only 20 now remain in the country; in Mexico 85 per cent of all the archaeological sites have been looted; in Pompeii in 1981 another earthquake damaged 650 of the 816 houses meticulously excavated on the site; only 10 per cent of the collection of the Museum of Modern Art in Rio de Janeiro survived a recent fire; the caves at Lascaux in France, with their drawings dating back over 12,000 years, the earliest manifestation of art, had to be closed just 15 years after they were opened to the public because the images of hunted beasts were fading away.

Perhaps the best epitome of the problem is the fan of Tutankhamen. It survived, with brilliant green stiffness, for 3,500 years in his encapsulated tomb; after 20 years of exposure in a museum it has shrivelled to a colourless skeleton.

The dangers are manifest: what are the solutions? It is doubtful whether international conferences can do much practical good, at least in Italy where the big names spot platitudes, with the politicians keen to trumpet their initiatives (and to gloss over the fact that Italy spends less than 0.2 per cent of its national budget on its unrivalled heritage), and museum directors, as civil servants, are careful not to annoy their superiors. The key issue in any heritage discussions in Italy - how do the treasures of the Church fit into any national preservation plan - was swept under the carpet.

The Trevi fountain in Rome: one of the few select sites to benefit from an intensive rescue operation

The local politicians were equally wishy-washy. The mayor of Venice suggested that visitor access across the lagoon to his island might be controlled, by high tolls or by time limits, but although the 106 inhabitants of the parish of San Marco, who play host to 6m gawpers a year, might welcome this initiative, the majority of his constituents that live off tourism might be less enthusiastic.

The mayor of Florence hoped that visitors might be pointed towards the less famous museums, galleries and churches in his city, but few would willingly forego the Botticellis at the Uffizi for the planned museum in the old Fiat factory in the suburbs. A proposed underground system for Florence might eventually reduce the pollution.

The most practical contribution came from Sir John Pope-Hennessy, who was the British Museum's Victoria Albert, and the Met in New York before retiring to Florence. He will have surprised his conservative friends by coming out in favour of punitive admission charges to reduce the throng at cultural shrines like St Marco's where the weight of numbers have caused the floors in some chapels to subside and mosaics to perish. Sir John also welcomes the day when the majority of important classical, medieval, and Renaissance statues are brought in from the ravages of the elements and placed in the safe environment of museums. This is already happening in Florence and few realise that they are admiring perfect cast copies of famous originals. It seems impossible now that the greatest al fresco statue in Rome, that of Marcus Aurelius astride his horse on the Capitoline, will ever return to its base. But with so many important museums in Italy mysteriously closed and the interior space available for housing substantial outdoor statues very limited, even this solution poses its own problems.

Of course the progress of science is enabling rescue operations to get underway on a select few sites. The Trevi Fountain in Rome is being meticulously restored and the Vatican has a good reputation for caring for its own, aided by the millions which Sony has poured into the repairs to the Sistine Chapel. An exhibition accompanying the Congress showed the progress made in underwater archaeology, how archaeologists on the Capitoline were unearthing even earlier ages of Rome; and how the original gardens at Pompeii could be brought back to life by botanists. But like Sisyphus and his boulder the challenge is relentless and currently unwinnable.

This is especially true of developing countries. Africa produces less than a dozen trained conservators a year and Asia around 50. They are powerless to cope with disintegrating marbles; fading wall paintings; theft and mindless destruction, to say nothing of earthquakes and floods and civil strife - the Gulf War opened up cracks in the two greatest Assyrian sculptures, the winged Khorsabad Bull and Salmesener's throne, to say nothing of the bombing of Ur of the Chaldees, the oldest city in the world.

The media can do little more than highlight, and warn, and pressure Governments, who in their turn find minimal concern among the public at large about the disappearing past. Research suggests that the press devotes much more space to the performing arts than to the cultural heritage and the Save Art 91, which hopes to re-emerge, ideally in a practical frame of mind, in 1992, could transform a few arts pages. But the odds seem stacked against conservation. Italy, which is so swash with treasures that its scheme to list them has so far made little progress, is currently without a Minister for Culture, and for the last three days of the Congress the Italian press was on strike.

Melina Mercouri, the Greek Minister for Culture, is going on again about the Elgin Marbles, putting pressure on the EC to put pressure on the UK to remove them from the British Museum to a proposed, but unbuild, museum in Athens.

She is exploiting a recent agreement by the cultural ministers of the EC that they should vigorously co-operate on returning to the country the original works of art that have been stolen and smuggled across borders. No one imagines that the new initiative should be retrospective almost two centuries.

In fact the Ministers reached an agreement on a minor matter because their Governments know that the one area which will be totally unaffected by the single market when it comes into force in January 1993 will be the movement of national artistic treasures. Ironically Greece, along with Italy and Spain, is most insistent that its cultural heritage stays in situ.

All that will happen is that each nation will make a list of key works of art that can never be exported. Germany already has such a list of around a hundred objects; the UK could easily assemble a list amounting to a few hundred masterpieces. After most treasures are safely in the national collections.

When it comes to Italy and the Mediterranean nations the lists could run into tens of thousands of objects. In Italy it will take longer to draw up a list than it will for Europe to accept a single currency, an elected European Parliament, and a Federal identity.

In Rome the chauvinism of nations about their artistic hoards was well illustrated by the director of the French museum who declared that after time objects take on the identity of the museum in which they are housed. With Napoleon a bawler looter for France than any Indian or African Imperialist for the UK the director of the BM can safely hide behind his colleague at the Louvre when defending historical chance.

'La Bercouze' by van Gogh: one of the Annenberg paintings which will hold its own among the Met's superb collection

Misjudgment at the Met

Homan Potterton on the problems posed by the Annenberg bequest

IN HIS recently published autobiography, Sir John Pope-Hennessy recalls at length the care (and pleasure) he took over the installation of the Metropolitan Museum, New York of what he calls "one of the finest groups of Impressionist and Post-Impressionist pictures in the world". In a magnificent top-lit space, he collaborated with the distinguished architect Kevin Roche to create a display of the museum's permanent collection that is not just a visual feast but a sensitive and erudite arrangement of many of the greatest masterpieces of late 19th century-early 20th century art.

Brilliant juxtapositions become apparent as you move through the gallery. The most obvious is the way the paintings of Cézanne, Renoir, Monet, Pissarro, and Van Gogh - and one by the Impressionist strength of the Met's collection. To one side are about ten pictures by Manet; to the other, glimpsed through many of the finest canvases Pissarro ever painted, is a small scene of him including what Sir John calls "his greatest painting", "La Grenouillère". A step further and there is Renoir's great 1879 portrait of "Madame Charpentier and her children"; in front walls Cézanne and to the left again, an alcove of Van Gogh. Wonderful pictures by Toulouse-Lautrec, Gauguin, and Seurat seem merely "by the way" and then there is a darkened annex of Degas pastels (almost 30 great ones), oils, and sculpture.

Now the Metropolitan plans on dismantling this display. What is to be done with the collection of Impressionist and Post-Impressionist pictures which Walter Annenberg has given to the museum after his death, and not just the pictures, but the whole of them, but make them the central focus of their new Impressionist and Post-Impressionist holdings.

It is announced this year, the Metropolitan Museum outwitted Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and the Art Institute of Chicago in Washington in persuading Annenberg to bequeath his collection to them - but only after they agreed to the most outlandish conditions. Chief among these was the stipulation that the collection would always be hung together as a group, a condition which would mean that the pictures would be integrated into the museum's overall display of Impressionist and Post-Impressionist pictures. A plan has been devised for a new model of it approved by Annenberg whereby the collection will be hung as an ensemble in a sort of central pavilion with the remainder of the museum's Impressionist and Post-Impressionist pictures relegated to radiating chapels. By the way, the new wing, drawings and prints are for the moment similarly miscellaneous, to celebrate the scope and quality of the collection. So we move from San Francisco water-colours to Basile's woodcuts by way of Johns and Rothko, Pollock and Rauschenberg, Cucheil and Paladino, Hall and Childe, Riley and Hesse, prints, drawings and water-colours alike, with Jenny Holzer's electronic epigram-mery to round it all off in a new hall for temporary installations.

All might be quite different next week. But outside at the cliff's edge, stark against the sky, Moore's reclining woman looks forever out to sea.

For example, Annenberg's three Tahitian Gauguins which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Renoir pales in comparison with Manet's "Olympia" or even the same artist's "two girls at the piano". A reclining nude by Renoir is of only marginally better quality than the two pictures of women by Renoir which the Met deaccessioned as recently as 1989. For the Met to want Annenberg's "Cézanne of 'Uncle Dominique' which would be the envy of most museums the world over, are hardly essential to the Metropolitan which already owns the artist's most important Tahitian canvas, "La Orona Maria". By the same token Annenberg's attractive group portrait of the daughters of Caillebotte by Reno

Market is down but not out

THE ART market stumbled badly in 1990 but did not collapse as the press gleefully reported. That misunderstanding occurred for three reasons. First, lacking the overview that is possible in a full annual listing of prices, some journalists based conclusions on slender evidence. Second, dramatically moderating news in the art market was almost ghoulish delight at their apparent come-uppance. However, preparations for a wake proved premature.

The sharp drop in volume at Christie's and Sotheby's in 1990 is explained almost entirely by the fall in the upper end of the Impressionist and Modern markets. Yet demand for mainstream works remained strong. Moreover, weakness in the 19th-century plus price range, leaving aside the factors, was a predictable response to a greatly increased supply. With Impressionist and Modern paintings falling, some sections of the market claimed that the market had dropped by 80 per cent or more.

The facts tell a different story. Paintings by 180 important artists in the present survey sold at auction during the 1989/90 season numbered 5,700, up 5 per cent on the previous year. More surprising still, prices overall showed an increase of 9 per cent in sterling terms, in what should be seen as a year of consolidation in the market. This is all the more remarkable for coming after the previous year's record rise of 55 per cent. (The period under review takes in the strong autumn of 1988, the weak spring and the depressed summer of 1989).

Even so the 1989/90 season will not evoke fond memories for the auctioneers. Record prices early in the season for Renoir, Van Gogh and dozens of other artists began to look freakish in the light of the ensuing failures. The market's meteoric rise since 1988 made it certain that there would be a setback at the highest level. For some sectors the trouble began in the spring of last year; for others in the summer, but for many it never came at all.

Several real factors and fears of worse to come forced the art market to recognise that it was overheating both in itself and in relation to other markets. Fears of a weak dollar and signs of widening economic pessimism were confirmed in the summer of 1990. Then too there were high interest rates, fears of war in the Middle East and higher oil prices. The fall in world stock markets triggered by Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in August only made matters worse, and already the weakening of Japanese property prices had removed a critical slice of demand for Impressionist and Modern paintings.

Meanwhile, more and more paintings were coming forward from long-term owners keen to cash in while the market was on the boil. Yet more came from recent speculative buyers - often people with a trading background - who had seen friends jump successfully in and out of the market.

Although the top end of the art business suffered last year demand for mainstream works remains strong, reports Robin Duthy

Worse still was the upsurge in the offerings at auction of state pictures that buyers had been unable to shift. Regulars on the auction circuit had the new sensation of desperate sale. Collectors responded by sitting on their hands, much as fund managers will watch a sliding equity market, preferring to wait for the market to move upward rather than judge when the index had hit bottom.

Among the weakest performances over the period were two of the four indexes of American painting. The 19th century American school peaked in 1988 with a rise of 680 per cent over its 1975 level; for each of the last two years it has dropped by 10 per cent, making a rise of just 510 per cent since 1975.

The American Impressionists surged ahead by 230 per cent on top of a volume rise of 23 per cent.

Among French schools, the Barbizon artists consolidated their recent gains with a 15 per cent rise, making 680 per cent since 1975. The French Impressionists still show the greatest gain of any group with a 2,200 per cent gain since 1975, though they edged up just 6 per cent last year.

Monet was the only French Impressionist to decline, with a fall of 30 per cent, a total of 30 per cent more Monets were sold than last year, but the market could only absorb these at lower prices.

The School of Paris produced an impressive 67 per cent rise in 1989 alone. The group includes household names such as Chagall, Picasso, Utrillo, Braque and Bonnard. The market for Picasso was especially buoyant with 248 works selling at an average of £260,000 - up 80 per cent over last year. Even more remarkable, given that many Japanese buyers had pulled out, was the 200 per cent gain for Marie Laurencin to give an overall rise of 2,300 per cent since 1975.

The Surrealists managed a 35 per cent gain on 1989 with Paul Klee up 90 per cent to an average of £120,000; 70 de Chirico were sold (compared with 47 last season) at prices averaging 86 per cent higher than last year. The German Expressionist index was up 22 per cent to give a rise of 870 per cent since 1975.

Among British schools, 18th-century portraits and sporting paintings both dropped 15 per cent. 19th-century water-colours marked time at 900 per cent above their 1975 level; Victorian painting was also steady at 640 per cent up and 20th-century painting, as measured by traditionalist artists such as Munnings, Seago, Dawson and Flint, was basically unchanged at 820 per cent above 1975.

If unsold lots were hypothetically included in the index at prices they might have sold at without reserve, the overall change in the index over the year would probably emerge at between unchanged and down 5 per cent - not quite the catastrophes that have been reported. Interesting as it might be, the exercise would have no more statistical validity than calculating a house price index after including houses for sale which might fetch a price if auctioned without reserve.

Many sectors - Old Master paintings and drawings in particular - have been notably strong since the start of the year. Moreover, the share prices of Sotheby's and Christie's have been signalling that the worst is over for three months now. The salerooms now see the sharp rise and fall of top-priced Impressionist and Modern paintings in 1988/89 as an unwelcome aberration. Until 1988 a steady growth pattern had been achieved and this, they expect, will now be resumed.

Realism method: The 1989 base figure for each artist is the average price of the central 50 per cent of paintings and water-colours by that artist actually sold at auction in the 1973/4, 1974/5 and 1975/6 seasons, as reported in the Art Sales Index, edited and published by Richard Bishop.

With a house price index or stock market index, the art indexes take into account only actual transactions. Paintings which fail to reach their reserve - the level at which owners are willing to sell - are excluded.

Our new gallery is now open and among the paintings on view are works by:-

ANTOINE BERJON
JOHANNES BOSSCHAERT
JAN BRUEGHEL THE YOUNGER AELBERT CUYP
JOHANN BAPTIST DRECHSLER
CORNELIS DE HEEM
AUGUSTUS JOHN
NICOLAS BERNARD LEPICIE
ABRAHAM MIGNON
JAN VAN OS
P J REDOUTE
SALOMON VAN RUYSDAEL
HORACE VERNET

JOHN MITCHELL & SON

160, New Bond Street, London W1 Tel: 071 493 7567 Fax: 071 493 5537

MARLBOROUGH

Alberto Giacometti (1901-1966)
Centauro de Diego 1957

INTERNATIONAL SCULPTURE

17 July - 30 August 1991

Marlborough Fine Art (London) Ltd.
11 Albemarle St, London W1X 4BY
Tel: 071-629 5161 Fax: 071-629 6338

SPINK COIN AND MEDAL AUCTION SALE No.85

Tuesday 23rd July 1991, at the Forte Crest, St James's, London SW1 (formerly the Cavendish Hotel)

Celtic coins of Britain; Charles II crowns and other British coinage.

A selection of British and Foreign Orders, Decorations, Medals, Books and Militaria.

Send £5 for fully illustrated catalogue.

SPINK & SON LTD, 5 & 7 KING STREET, ST JAMES'S, LONDON SW1Y 6GS.
TEL: 071-930 7888 FAX: 071-639 4833 TELEX: 91671L

Ariadne Galleries

COLNAGHI

14 OLD BOND STREET
LONDON W1X 4JL
TELEPHONE: 071-91 7438
FACSIMILE: 071-91 8281

21 EAST 67th STREET
NEW YORK NY 10021
TELEPHONE: 213-772 2266
FACSIMILE: 213-772 4323

FRANÇOIS BOUCHER (1703-1770)
The Adoration of the Shepherds

Monochrome oil on paper, 17 1/2 x 11 1/2 ins.
This unpublished oil sketch is datable to around 1765

EXHIBITION OF MASTER DRAWINGS

In our London gallery until 12 July

Catalogue available

ANTHEA DUROSE

A valuable collection of works in oil

For appointment to view
Tel: 0264 352410 or 0836 231745

BATH & BRADFORD ON AVON ANTIQUE DEALERS ASSOCIATION

The Georgian city of Bath and the old world town of Bradford on Avon provide the scene of the most pleasant and interesting antique shopping in Great Britain. Our members, who number over fifty and are all established dealers in antique and decorative items, welcome all collectors and dealers and will do everything possible to make your visit worthwhile.

FOR A FREE BROCHURE & LIST OF MEMBERS, WRITE:

BATH & BRADFORD ON AVON ANTIQUE DEALERS ASSOCIATION

34 Piccadilly, London Road, Bath.

Tel: (0223) 462218

CRANE GALLERY

Place au Havre, 1922 by DE STAËL. Oil on canvas: 27 x 33 cms

PROVENANCE: Mrs. Boudier, Paris

AFFINITIES IN PAINT

Bombier Rouault Soutine

and major works by

APPEL AUERBACH
BACCI
BOGART BOWLING
de STAËL
DOUCET
DUBUFFET
JORN HOFMANN
HOYLAND
LITKE
OLITSKI
LITKE

Until end July

171a Sloane Street, (First Floor), London SW1X 9QG

Tel: 071-235 2464 Fax: 071-584 3843 Mon-Fri 10-6, Sat 10-4pm.

The BRIGHTON Antiques Show

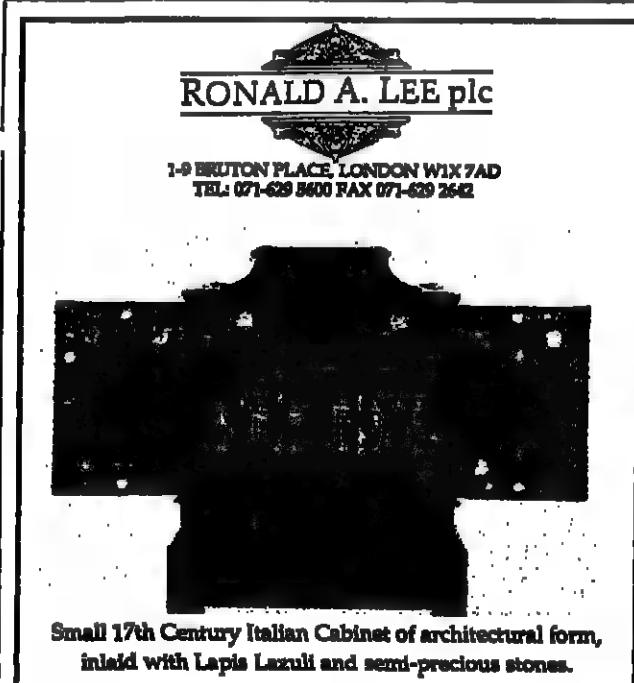

Corn Exchange, Brighton, Sussex

Thurs, Sat & Sun 11-6 July 10-21 Friday 11-9

35 Stands, 6 Room Sets, the LAPADA Pavilion.

Seize the Last of this 32-year-old Annual Event

Former Exhibitor: Reichenbach's (London) 0444 484531

Small 17th Century Italian Cabinet of architectural form, inlaid with Lapis Lazuli and semi-precious stones.

RICHMOND GALLERY

Summer Exhibition

19th and 20th Century English and Continental Paintings

Monday to Friday 10 - 6, Saturday 10 - 1.

8 Cork Street, London W1X 1PB.

Tel: 071-437 9422 Fax: 071-734 7018

A MEMBER OF THE ASPREY GROUP

FROST AND REED

16 OLD BOND STREET, LONDON W1X 3DB

Telephone 071-629 2457

Bathing Impressionist 11 x 18 inches

FORTHCOMING EXHIBITION:

Recent Paintings by Anders Gisson

27th June - 19th July

Knight Frank & Rutley INTERNATIONAL

• AUSTRALIA • BELGIUM • BOTSWANA • FRANCE • GERMANY • HONG KONG • INDONESIA • ITALY • JAPAN • MALAYSIA •

• NEW ZEALAND • NIGERIA • SINGAPORE • SPAIN • SWEDEN • SWITZERLAND • STATES OF AMERICA • ZIMBABWE •

Herefordshire

Hereford 5 miles.
M50 11 miles.
London 2 1/2 hours.
A top quality Middle Wye Fishery on one of England's finest salmon rivers Home Lacy No.5 and Fownhope No.6
"The Golden Mile"
9 named pools and catches including good fly water.
A superb fully equipped modern "lodge" with living room, kitchen, 3 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms. Stables and paddock.
For sale freehold as a whole
Apply: (0438) 273067

Perthshire

Perth 26 miles.
Edinburgh 66 miles.
Stairgowrie 11 miles.
A superb estate set close to Glenshee amongst wonderful countryside
House with 3 reception rooms, 3 bedrooms, bathroom and shower room, 2 room guest suite.
4 bedroom cottage.
Traditional range of buildings with enormous development possibilities.
Seasonal grazing and extensive producing about 25,000 sq ft.
Small and easily run farming enterprise. Shooting with lightening pool, fishing on the River Blackwater and trout loch.
About 360 acres
Apply: Edinburgh 031-225 7105

Inverness-shire

Cannich 6 miles.
Inverness 36 miles.
Inverness Airport 41 miles.
An attractive deer forest in an unspoilt and idyllic lochside setting
Superb deer valley averaging 45 stags and 87 hinds.
Good trout fishing.
8 miles loch frontage.
Lodge.
2 reception rooms and 4 bedrooms.
Cottages.
2 reception rooms and 4 bedrooms.
2 Bachelors.
1 reception room and 2 bedrooms each.
Deer ladder and workshop.
About 4,500 acres
Apply: Edinburgh 031-225 7105

Surrey

Bletchingley 1 mile. Godalming 1 mile. M25 5 miles.
A selection of beautifully positioned farms, houses, cottages and land
Cottages from £75,000
Land from £1,350 per acre
About 374 acres
For sale in 14 lots by Private Treaty or Auction later
Joint Agents: RH & RW Chittam, East Grinstead (0438) 410122
Knight Frank & Rutley, Guildford (0438) 851771

Hampshire/Berkshire Border

Newbury 5 miles. M40/J31 9 miles.
London 65 miles.
An imposing Edwardian mansion in landscaped grounds with outstanding views
Galleried reception hall, 8 main reception rooms, 27 bedrooms and further accommodation.
About 35,000 sq ft.
Secondary house (about 8,500 sq ft.) 4 cottages.
Coach house.
Swimming pool. Hard tennis court.
Extensive gardens and wooded grounds.
Established use as a country hall.
Residential home and suitable for a wide range of alternative uses subject to any necessary consents.
About 18 acres
Apply: Hungerford (0438) 682738 or London 011-888 6171

Surrey

London 38 miles. Farnham 3 miles. Guildford 11 miles.
A fine estate in a superb location
An 18th century manor house with magnificent formal gardens.
Tennis court. Swimming pool. Coach house. Farmhouse.
6 detached cottages. Barns with potential for conversion.
Farms with arable, potato and pig buildings. Off-lying land and paddocks.
Extensive river frontage.
About 100 acres
As a whole or in 10 lots
Apply: Guildford (0438) 851771 or London 071-629 8171

Buckinghamshire

Jordans, Beaconsfield 4 miles. M40 J18 2 miles. London 26 miles.
A substantial and mature village property set in extensive grounds offering a high degree of privacy and seclusion
8 reception rooms, 8 bedrooms, 3 bathrooms. Landscaped gardens, triple garage, horse厩, stables, swimming pool.
About 2 acres
Others in the region of £250,000
Apply: Beaconsfield (0494) 876386

West Sussex

On the instructions of the Executors of the Late C.W.P. Hampton Esq.
Bosham 1 1/2 miles. A23 2 miles. London 40 miles.
A Grade II listed house with beautiful gardens and extensive outbuildings
4 reception rooms, master bedroom suite, guest bedroom suite, 3 further bedrooms, further bathroom. Converted timber framed barn with office forming part of an extensive garage complex. Formerly housing vintage and classic cars.
Detached stone granary building. Walled kitchen garden. Gardens and grounds including ponds and lake. Pasture land. Woodland. 5 semi-detached cottages.
About 78 acres
As a whole or in lots
Apply: London 071-629 8171

Buckland-Tout-Saints Devon

Kingsbridge 2 miles. Dartmouth 6 miles. Plymouth 20 miles. Exeter 35 miles.
A fine Queen Anne manor house, listed Grade II* set in magnificent landscaped gardens in the heart of the South Hams Conveniently an award winning country house hotel.
4 reception rooms, 14 letting bedrooms with en suite bathrooms.
1 bedroom manager's flat. 8 staff bedrooms. Delightful gardens.
About 5 acres
Apply: Exeter (0392) 433033 or London 071-629 8171

Surrey/Berkshire Border

Wentworth. Ascot 4 miles. M25 5 miles. Heathrow 14 miles.
London 38 miles.
A beautifully presented house with probably the best views on Wentworth golf course Reception hall, 5 reception rooms, beautifully tiled dining room, master bedroom with en suite bathroom and 3 dressing rooms, guest bedroom with en suite bathroom, 3 further bedrooms and bathroom suites, 3 further bedrooms, further bathroom. Heated swimming pool, 4 car garage.
Attractive gardens and grounds with far reaching views.
About 2 1/2 acres
Apply: Ascot (0344) 247322 or London 071-629 8171

20 Hanover Square, London W1R 0AH Telephone: 071-629 8171

D. M. HALL

Berwickshire

Coldstream

Coldstream 3 miles
Kelso 10 miles
A Fine Victorian Country House in the Heart of the Scottish Borders.
Hall, 3 Reception Rooms, Kitchen, 6 Bedrooms, 2 Bathrooms, and Shower Room. Tower room and 2 further Attic Rooms.
Attractive, easily maintained gardens. Hay Barn and stabling for 3 horses.
6 acres of grazing in 2 paddocks.
About 1 1/2 acres

Banffshire

Crathie

Crathie 3 miles
Elgin 12 miles
An historic residential, agricultural and sporting estate on the bank of the River Fiddich.
Mansion House in incorporating 15th Century Castle. 11 Reception Rooms, 9 Bedrooms, 4 Bathrooms.
589 acre Home Farm - 187 arable, 219 grassland. Good modern farm buildings. Extensive Woodland.
Established Pheasant Shoot and 1 1/2 miles of fishing on the River Fiddich.
634 Acres

Jackson-Stops & Staff

Hampshire/Sussex Borders

Beaconsfield, Farnham and Winchester.
An outstanding residential estate in spectacular countryside.
Georgian house with main hall, drawing room, dining room, sitting room, conservatory, usual domestic offices, 6 bedrooms, 4 bathrooms.
Swimming pool, tennis court, extensive gardens and grounds. Stable yard and garaging. Staff cottage. Farm manager's house with 5 bedrooms, 5 reception rooms. Further cottages. Buildings with commercial use. Modern farm buildings. About 518 acres in all.
For sale as a whole or in lots.
Joint Agents: Symonds & Sampson.
Apply: Market Place, Midhurst GU29 9NJ.
Telephone: (0730) 812357.

Essex/Suffolk Border

Buxford 1 1/2 miles. Colchester 10 miles.
A beautiful Listed Grade II Elizabethan Manor House in a parkland setting.
Superb reception hall, domestic offices, 3/4 reception rooms, 3 bedrooms, 3 bathrooms, games room with annex studio. Coach house, stabling, range of outbuildings, swimming pool, 2 1/2 acre lake, woodland and paddocks, garden. In all about 16 acres. Ref: 7334.
Apply: 168 High Street, Newmarket CB8 9AJ.
Telephone: (0638) 662231.

CHISWICK PLACE: AWARD WINNING ARCHITECTURE IN THE REGENCY STYLE

4 BED HOUSES FROM £315,000. 1 BED AND 2 BED APARTMENTS. PRICES FROM £99,950.

In Chiswick, Barratt have re-created the Regency period.
Tree-lined avenues, bold balconies, balustrades.
Up to the minute kitchens. Sumptuous bathrooms. Landscaped gardens. Conservatories, dressing rooms.
Just a 11 minute walk to Chiswick station then 18 minutes to Waterloo.
R.I.B.A. Award winner 1989.
"What House" Best Exterior Design 1990.
Winner NHBC Supreme Award for Quality 1991.

Showhomes open every day 11am-6pm.
Staveley Road, London W4. 081 742 1185.

BARRATT
THE HOUSE BUILDER

031-220 2323

COUNTRY DEPARTMENT
25, NEWBURY STREET, DUNSTON, WILTS

HASLEMERE, SURREY

Waterloo 45 mins
5 mins A3-M25
Charming Grade II
House with 6 bedrooms,
2 Baths, 3 Reception, kitchen / breakfast, office suite, bar/terrace, courtyard, extensive garaging 5 acre grounds with paddocks.
OFFERS AROUND £500,000

BLACK HORSE AGENCIES
GASCOIGNE-PEES HASLEMERE (0428) 61363

KINGSWOOD, SURREY

Large family house backing onto Golf Course. 5 beds, 2 baths, 4 reccs.
250,000 required
For further details please phone
Office: 0932 563939 or evenings 0737 832834

BOCA RATON, PALM BEACH

You are cordially invited to consider a selection of extraordinary waterfront and/or golfcourse community homes.
RSVP to
Charles Panzer/Roslyn Corcoran
407-391-9097 • Fax: 407-391-6520
Coldwell Banker Real Estate
101 N. Federal Highway
Boca Raton, Florida 33432
A member of the Coldwell Banker
Network

VILLARS SWISS ALPS

SKI AND SUMMER RESORT
70 minutes from Geneva airport.
A choice of distinguished chalets and apartments in prime positions, on our exclusive private park Domaine de la Vallée, or in the village center.
Direct sale from the developer.
Attractive low interest Swiss finance.
Contact: David de Lamoignon
15 Hameau Road London W12 9NE
Tel: 081-749 2138 Fax: 081-749 0338

SWITZERLAND

Sale to foreigners authorized
Lake Geneva Mountain resorts
You can own a quality APARTMENT/CHALET in: MONTREUX, VILLARS, LES DIABLERETS, LEysin, GSTAAD Valley, CRANS-MONTANA,
VERBIE, etc. from Sfr. 200'000.— Credit facilities.
52, rue de la République - 1202 GENEVA
Tel. 41.22.734.15.40 - Fax 734.12.20

PERSPECTIVES

Tot that fortified the Navy's spirit

Roger Paine recalls the rum ration which ended 21 years ago

RUM HAS a long association with the sea and sailors, especially those in the Royal Navy who, until 21 years ago, used to get a daily ration. This tradition ended on July 3, 1970 - Black Tot Day - when the Portsmouth Evening News recorded that "sailors in ships and establishments in the area... said farewell to the last issue of Nelson's Blood by conducting mock funerals and wearing black armbands."

The rum issue sprang directly from what a 17th century sea captain called, the "stinking" quality of beer on board ship, and the difficulties of obtaining and keeping fresh water. In spite of improvements in administration and victualling instigated by the Admiralty Secretary, Samuel Pepys, there were no overseas bases, and with British and French expansion in the Americas and West Indies, it became common for ships visiting the islands to stock up on the cheap local brew.

On February 14, 1727, the captain of HMS Greyhound in Port Royal, Jamaica, denounced the lethargy of his crew in building a jolly and wrote: "If anything can make it (life) agreeable to them, it may be a double allowance of rum being joined to what extra pay may be thought proper."

As the crewmen were already receiving half a pint of rum each per day as an alternative to beer, the skipper's recommendation implied that his men should have a pint of rum per day to make them work harder!

With more ships visiting the West Indies, the first official approval to issue rum every day was given in 1731. By the end of that decade, although still confined largely to British ships in the Caribbean, the practice had become widespread. The rum was drunk undiluted and this inevitably led to many accidents at sea as well as much drunkenness in harbour. The press-ganged crews were not allowed shore leave but this did not stop them smuggling rum on board in coconuts, drained of their milk.

Vice Admiral Edward Vernon, Commander in Chief of the West Indies Station, was appalled at drunkenness in his fleet. In 1740, he ordered: "Whereas the pernicious custom of the seamen drinking their allowance of rum in draught, and often at once, is attended by many fatal effects to their morals as well as their health, the daily issue of half a pint is to be diluted with a quart of water to be mixed in one scuttle-butt... in the presence of the Lieutenant of the Watch."

This mixture immediately became known as "grog," a term derived from the Admiral's nickname of "Old Groggum" because he wore a program - a waterproof coat.

The issue was permitted twice a day, at noon and sunset. As a result drunkenness became less prevalent. Grog-drinking spread as more ships from the West Indies were diverted off-station or arrived back in England with full casks of rum in their holds. But it took another 40 years for the Admiralty to accept, reluctantly, that rum was the navy to stay. In 1784, James Man, a cooper and merchant dealing in a variety of imported goods from the West Indies was appointed as official rum-broker. The spirit was shipped directly to bonded warehouses, where it was bought by the Navy's victualling department and stored at the yards being built at Gosport and Devonport. The rum was specified as 40 per cent over proof and the company, today known as E D and F Man, continued to supply rum to the Navy until the final issue nearly 200 years later.

Grog in its original form continued to be issued twice daily. But in 1824, Admiral Lord Keith, still concerned with drunkenness in the fleet, recommended the issue be reduced to a gill of rum, mixed with two equal parts of water, given once a day "to every victualled member of the Ship's Company over the age of 20 years and not temporary." A gill - equal then to a quarter of a pint - of navy rum was equivalent in strength to four double whiskies today.

In 1850, the ration was cut to half a gill, which continued to be issued until 1968. Then, senior service officers and a campaigning parliamentary lobby, recognising the increased complexity of ships and naval warfare, recommended that the issue of grog to sailors and most spirit to chief petty officers and petty officers should be ended.

The unenviable task of ending the Royal Navy of this decision fell to the First Sea Lord, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Michael Le Fanu. He signalled the fleet "Most farewell messages try to tear-jerk the tear from the eye. But I say to you lot, Very sad about tot. And thank you, good luck and goodbye."

The Board of the Admiralty in a Groggy memories: sailors queue up with their "fannies" their rum rations at the Royal Navy Barracks in Portsmouth in 1968 remarkable act of foresight and entrepreneurial flair, not normally associated with crusty admirals in Whitehall, sanctioned the sale of the special blending formula (which had for so long been a secret), together with the distillery in Tortola in the British Virgin Islands, to an American millionaire businessman, and former US marine, Charles Tobias.

In partnership with the E D and F Man, Tobias markets the product world-wide as "Pusser's." "Pusser" is, in naval jargon, a corruption of the word purser that had come to mean anything official.

The rum ration had sacrosanct traditions and special language. Sailors were expected to remove their headgear in respect to the monarch when receiving their ration from the tub on which was emblazoned, in brass letters, "The Queen God Bless Her."

The issue was supervised by the officer of the day, and a petty officer, assisted by the "tanky" (a seasoned tar whose name derived from the days when the sailing master's assistant looked after the fresh water tanks) and the "Jack Dusty" (so called after his early storekeeping duties in the dusty bread room), whose job was to account for the rum and take care of the copper measures and lipped jugs.

The issue was collected by sailors in receptacles known as "fannies" - reputedly named after a young woman, Fanny Adams, murdered in Deptford victualling yard in the nineteenth century. Her remains were said to have been mixed with the preserved mutton then issued to the fleet in large round tins. Officers never received rum, except on the occasion of "spikes the mainbrace" when an extra tot was issued to every person serving on board in recognition of a special event. In sailing ship days the rating who had the daunting task of splicing the main brace when it parted in stormy weather received an extra tot of rum.

The tot had its own vocabulary. "Neaters" was the neat rum issued to senior ratings, "Queen's" was anything left over after the issue - so called as belonging to the Queen - or alternatively "Flashers" and traditionally passed around those present at the time. "Slippers" was a small, polite sip from a friend's issue and "Gulpen" a good swallow, probably in return for a favour or a duty carried out on a friend's behalf, for rum was a form of shipboard currency. "Sandy Bottoms" was the invitation to drink whatever was left in a shipmate's mug.

Despatches/Robert Thomson

Eastern flesh trade on the ropes

UNDER A SHINING Shinto shrine, and slightly out-of-synch with the rhythm of a thumping disco beat, Yuri Arbachakov pounds the heavy bag at Kyoei Gym. On the floor nearby, Rouslan Taramov is lifting weights, and their trainer, Alexander Zimov, is using an interpreter to pass on advice to a young, unscarred Japanese boxer.

Arbachakov and his fellow Soviet citizens are about. There is no side-stepping. They have come to Japan - the money and the glory, for the prospect of the Big Pay Day that will follow a Japanese-sponsored world title fight. They have served the motherland by winning European and Olympic gold medals, and now their fists have entered the free market.

The Japanese interest was in the night forward. With perestroika has come professional boxing, and Masaki Kanehira, Kyoei's chairman, paid Soviet sporting authorities an undisclosed amount for the rights to manage some of the country's leading talents. Frustrated by the short-term local talent, Kanehira realised that you could import high quality raw materials from Moscow and take a fair slice of the value-added on the way to a world title.

But what should have been a simple transaction has become rather complicated. The Japanese gym complains that having been fitted as heroes of the Soviet state, a few of the boxers stepped into the ring of free enterprise with strange ideas about the relationship between money and effort. They were, says Kanehira, expecting a financial KO in the first round.

Eight boxers were imported just over a year ago, and four, all heavyweights, have gone home. The remaining four have not lost a fight, and all but one of their opponents have been knocked out. Two have won Japanese national titles and three are thought good prospects for world titles.

But the heavyweights were unhappy. Kanehira has a simple explanation for their return: "They weren't hungry. Under the communist system they had been given everything, and they weren't hungry to win."

The Soviet fighters' surprise at the workings of Japanese boxing is understandable. They were lured by the distant vision of Tokyo's bright lights, but found few of the famous cent globes flickering at the Kyoei gym. The gym is in the basement of a slightly rundown building in the somewhat seedy suburb of Shinjuku. Shoes must be removed at the door, and swapped for plastic sandals. The gym is cramped, with a practice ring to one side, posters of up-and-coming Japanese fighters on the wall and the usual array of heavy bags, weights and speed balls. There was a warm-up room, but Kanehira turned that into a Brazilian samba club, which is run by a young man from Shanghai. Three shows a night, genuine Brazilian drinks and genuine Brazilian girls in genuine skimpy lotardas.

Above the entrance to the samba club, where you are supposed to keep your shoes on, a small sign politely warns customers in Japanese that "drunkards and gang members are not admitted." If Japanese newspapers and police are to be believed, gangs, or yakuza, take an active interest in boxing, as they also take an active interest in stock trading, property dealing and other sports of the financial kind.

Kanehira says that his gym, "the best gym in Japan and the home of five world champions," does no business with the gangs: "We have a little joke. We say that there is so little money in boxing that instead of the gangs harassing boxers for protection money, the gangs should be worried about the boxers threatening them."

There is no gambling on fights, he said, though patrons may give a money-filled envelope to a favourite boxer on fight night. "It's a tradition in Japan. It's money for good luck and encouragement."

Such Japanese traditions are new to Arbachakov, who is home in Siberia and who signed a three-year contract with Kyoei. Now 24, he won a world amateur flyweight title in 1989, and is the ninth-ranked boxer in his class after seven professional fights. He enjoys Japan and has been astounded by the material wealth.

There is a contradiction. In the Soviet Union everything was decided for you, but you were part of the team and had to work for the team. In Japan, there is a great supply of material things, but you have to get them for yourself. You can't rely on an organisation.

Kyoei's enthusiasm for imported boxers is causing controversy in Japan. Apart from the Soviets, Kanehira has contracted three Mexicans, a South Korean and a Taiwanese. Some Japanese are annoyed that a Japanese gym should be using foreigners to win national titles instead of cultivating young Japanese fighters. Kanehira, who gulf his boxing career early because "I wanted to keep my brain", doesn't much care about the complaints.

"Boxing is an international sport and Japan is becoming more international. We also have a Japanese boxer who is the number two in his class, and our policy is to provide a good environment for all boxers, regardless of their nationality. In countries with a poor economy, boxers don't make much money. Naturally they want to come to Japan."

Still, Kanehira was disappointed when the heavyweights went home. His "dream" is to manage a heavy weight in a world title fight, but for reasons of physique, he is unable to find a champion in Japan. He has targeted a young Soviet super-heavyweight likely to represent his country at the Barcelona Olympics next year. Given the boxer, Kanehira has already gone several rounds with the dream.

"It is maybe five years from now. It would be at the Tokyo, Dome. There would be 50,000 people in the stands. We would have the Soviet boxer up against the black American champion. We would win."

The Da Vinci by IWC.

Even if the name weren't protected, no other watch would be capable of bearing it.

59,950-18ct gold, with leather strap.

It has to be a chronograph with perpetual calendar and moon phase display up to the year 2499. That stops the time exactly to an eighth of a second and thereby automatically counts the minutes and hours. A chronograph that even knows automatically whether the month has 28, 29, 30 or 31 days-for centuries to come. A chronograph that shows, day in day out, the position of the moon in the sky. And automatically changes the date, weekday, month, and even the year - without the need for any correction - up to New Year's Eve 2199. In chronograph with a mechanical masterpiece, the precision of which others have to measure up to. In chronograph with a case crafted in 18ct yellow gold on which the individual serial number and your own name is engraved on the base.

Even in the most unlikely event of you ever coming across a watch with these astonishing features, there would still be one significant feature missing: The Da Vinci is made by IWC.

£3,375-18ct gold with leather strap.

It has to be a chronograph that's slim enough to fit on a woman's wrist. A chronograph that makes it easier to find excuses for being late for an appointment - so the precision, where otherwise you could only excuse yourself for the delay of minutes or hours. A chronograph that cannot tell you what is written in the stars, but will accurately inform you of the moon phase at any given time. A chronograph with date display. And with an individual serial number engraved on the solid gold case. On which a name may be engraved that is equally worthy of the Da Vinci by IWC. Your own name.

IWC

International Watch Co. Ltd., Schaffhausen, Switzerland Since 1868

If you would like to know more about the Da Vinci chronographs and other masterpieces, please ask for the IWC complete catalogue. IWC Schaffhausen, 124a, Market Road North, Thames Ditton, Surrey KT7 1BT. Telephone: 081-339

LONDON: ASPREY - BOND STREET; HARRIS - KNIGHTSBRIDGE; DAVID MORRIS - CONDUIT STREET; THE WATCH GALLERY - FULHAM ROAD AND JERMYN; MAPPIN & WEBB - QUEEN STREET AND REGENT STREET; GARRARD - THE CROWN; JEWELLERS: HOWARDS - STRATFORD-UPON-AVON; C. S. BEDFORD - NORTHWOOD; THE BUSSELL; HARRIS - HARRGATE AND YORK; MAPPIN & WEBB - GUILDFORD.

Hobby Horses/Nigel Spivey

Words for dreamers

NATHAN has not equipped me with the necessary devices of an investigative journalist. Accordingly I was grateful when, having ventured a foot into the London Esperanto Centre, a man rose from his desk, shook my hand, and spontaneously told me everything about Esperanto I might ever have wanted to ask.

In retrospect I see that this warm, almost glib reception was in tune with Esperantist ideals of universal goodwill and mutual understanding. The very name "Esperanto" carries the package of hope invested in the language by its creator, a Jewish oculist in Muscovite Poland who, in 1887, issued a textbook prescribing an interlingua means of communication.

He was not a professional philologist. Esperanto was his hobby-horse, and it remains so for the several thousands of people round the world who can be said to have mastered it. Officially there is support from Unesco, and certain radio stations (but none in the UK) give airtime to occasional Esperanto broadcasts. But mostly the enterprise survives on the enthusiasm of small groups, united under the academic structure of the World Esperanto Association, whose president is John Wells, professor of phonetics at University College, London.

I left the Esperanto centre clutching a copy of Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde in Esperanto (Doktoro Jekilo kaj Sinjoro Hyde). Without one lesson in Esperanto, I can confirm the claims made for the language. It is easy to learn. It is regular. It makes sense. The vocabulary (especially if you know some Latin, or a Romance language) presents few problems.

If I declared, for example, mi petro ne estas besto, I would expect many people un schooled in Esperanto to interpret it as "my father was not an animal." Is not doubt that learning to speak Esperanto takes a fraction of the time and energy required to learn, say, German or English.

Attractively simple as its enthusiasts claim it to be, I can still be surprised by Esperanto's survival. After all, you do not have to be a bar-stool patriot to see that English is more or less established as the lingua franca - as it happens, an ironic title - of international communication. Few skills are more in demand than those of teaching English as a foreign language (TEFL), especially since the fall of the Iron Curtain; and most English schools remain justifiably complacent about not educating polyglot children.

Yet the Esperantists battle on. A family in Newbury, in Berkshire, is in its third generation of using Esperanto as a first language at home, and Esperantist literature carries the claim. "Esperanto - the only solution." So what is the problem?

A partial answer is "phrasal verbs." These are the blighters of English, as anyone who has ever tried to instruct foreigners will testify. "Bring up," "bring out," "bring down" - you may appreciate the accuracy of English usage involved in these verbs.

"Basic English" (which would restrict vocabulary to 850 words) never purged English of the phrasal verb problem. Basic English failed. So too did Lancelotti Hogben's "Interlingua" scheme. Yet both Basic English and Interlingua had the same impulse as Espe-

Interlingua, a means of international scientific discourse, was drafted by Hogben in 1942 during "empty hours of fire-watching in Aberdeen," and Basic English belongs to that League of Nations bonhomie after the First World War.

"What makes a nation is a common language. What will make men international will be a common language."

Esperantists can take some pride in the durability of their particular formula for world peace. But the problem to which they claim to have the answer is not merely a plague of diverse tongues. My informant at the London Esperanto centre stoutly asserted its economic benefits. Did I know that 35 per cent of the EC budget goes on translation and related services? I did not. (Of true, it does not amaze me. It will be interesting to see how Jacques Delors deals with this one. Single market, single currency: sooner or later, a single language has to come.) Why not Esperanto?

Wells himself has recently produced a dictionary of Welsh Esperanto - which strikes me as a conspicuously virtuous act of disinterested scholarship. The appearance of such a dictionary itself explains why Esperanto, despite its claims, will remain at the periphery of international communication.

Contradictory or not, our age is one of nationalistic internationalism. The last thing the Welsh, the Catalans and the Flemings want is homogeneity. Apart from the Esperantists, is there anyone who actually "de-babelization"?

This is the Esperanto Centre, 140 Holland Park Avenue, London W11 4UP. Tel. 071-727-7821

The designer look

Terence Conran has spent the last 20 years meticulously restoring an old farmhouse in Provence.

or artistic clutter?

David Hockney's beach retreat is crammed with leopardskin furniture and pab ashtrays.

164-PAGE SUMMER ISSUE

METROPOLITAN HOME

THE INSIDE

HERNIA?

You can now have most hernias treated as a day case, even ON A SUNDAY!

At the GROSVENOR CLINIC, a luxurious, modern clinic in Hendon Central, you can be expertly treated when it suits you, by our team of Harley Street specialist surgeons - and go home the same day.

To find out more about DAY-CASE HERNIA, call 081-283 9886

The Grosvenor Clinic is licensed by the British Health Authority

EMMA HOPE'S SHOES

FOR MEN & WOMEN

SALE

35 ANWELL STREET ECT
Tel: 071-533 2267
ANGEL TUBE STATION

Handwritten note: 12/10/91

HOW TO SPEND IT

Lucia van der Post finds out why it is bargain time in the rug trade and recommends a visit to a showcase for Britain's best young designers

IF YOU have ever longed to own a Persian carpet, if you have any floors that look a little bleak or unloved, now is the time to gather your resources and buy as many Persian rugs as you need or can afford. Buy them for yourself, for your children or for your grandchildren. Experts seem to agree that they are unlikely to be as cheap for a long time to come.

What we are talking about here are new Persian rugs - old and antique ones have generally held their value - but new ones are about half the price they were ten to 15 years ago.

Before the 1979 revolution prices in Iran were rising fast so fast that many London stores and wholesalers were embarking on enterprising schemes to give customers the Persian look at more reasonable prices. Some were having traditional Persian designs woven in India and others were trying to find customer tastes into more economical channels.

After the revolution the supply of new carpets fell sharply. It became an unfashionably wealthy business to be associated with, many factories were closed and skills lost, but gradually, as the Iranian government became more desperate for foreign currency, old factories began to be opened and village skills once more encouraged.

Today, a combination of world recession, the massive devaluation of the Iranian rial, American sanctions and Iran's desperate need for foreign currency has driven prices lower than most people can remember. What this means to you and me is that a rug that cost about $2,000 in 1979 can now be bought for about $2,200.

From bonded warehouses in Kentish Town, London, to specialist dealers such as David Black and The Oriental Rug Gallery and the department stores, the news is the same: if you like Persian rugs and have a need for one, then buy now. American sanctions are unlikely to last much longer and once they are lifted the chances are that prices will rise fast.

To put the fall in prices into perspective it is worth looking at two examples. One is a silk fringe rug, about 7ft 6in by 5ft 6in, or a silk Qum rug, measuring about 7ft 6in by 4ft 6in. In 1979 each would have cost about $2,000. In 1984 the same rug would have cost 1,300,000 rials; in Iran, $4,000 in the bonded warehouses and $3,000 in the shops. By 1988 they would have been 1,700,000 rials and $3,500 in the warehouses, $2,700 in the shops. This year, with inflation raging in Iran and the rial devalued by 2,000%, the same quality of rug would cost 3m rials but just $2,200 in the UK's bonded warehouses and about $4,400 in the shops.

To put against the fall in price it has to be said that the quality of the finest rugs, the Isfahani and the silk Qum, is still quite what it was - although the skills and the designs are the same as ever, the lack of foreign exchange

David Wilkins, Persian and oriental carpet broker, looking through a bale of Persian carpets in one of the bonded warehouses in London's Kentish Town means that they have to use home-grown wool, silks and dyes instead of the imported versions.

Carpets at magic prices

When it comes to village rugs, which many people prefer as they have great vitality and individuality, there is almost no detectable falling-off in quality for they always come with local weaves and dyes. Today, they represent a remarkable value - you could buy a 6ft by 4ft hand-woven village rug from Hamadan for about $350 in the shops.

As Persian carpets have always been the benchmark for quality in the oriental rug world, the sharp fall in price has affected the rest of the market. For instance, anybody who has a penchant for Chinese carpets should buy now. If you decide that it is a good moment to buy some new Persian rugs, where do you go? Undoubtedly the way to go is to the lowest prices is to go to one of the brokers who has access to the bonded warehouses. Here the broker pays the wholesale price and, because he has low overheads he sells the rug on to you at a price that is much lower than you would have to pay in a retail shop.

From Tibet - a Tibetan Tiger on blue from Alain Rousseau's galleries

Besides the advantage of price, a good broker will not only know all the dealers, he will also know his rugs.

Good ones such as John Lewis, Harrods, House of Fraser, Liberty's and Harvey Nichols all have a high reputation for honesty - nearly everybody is agreed that if they say a rug is Persian it is, but the price you pay for this security is quite high. Also, there is usually a limited choice.

Prices in the stores may be higher than in the bonded warehouses but they, too, have fallen - as Liberty's, for instance, a Heriz carpet from north Iran, measuring some 3ft 6in by 2ft 6in, which would have cost about $2,000 in 1979, is now between $2,250 and $2,500. At John Lewis and House of Fraser a great deal of price-cutting seems to be going on and you can get a good quality new Persian rug, measuring about 6ft 6in by 4ft 6in for about $350.

Outside of the stores and the good brokers, the world of rugs is a minefield. Tales full of Byzantine intrigue, trickery and betrayal abound.

Beware the fly-by-night operations - whenever you see closing down sales advertised be very alert. Some never close. Others put high mythical original prices on the price tags and then mark them down by big amounts.

A respected dealer who operates in the bonded warehouses told me that many of those who advertise on hoardings and in the press borrow merchandise from the warehouses for a weekend auction on a Friday and return unsold stock on the Monday.

David Wilkins, 27 Princess Road, Regents Park, London NW1 8JK. Tel: 071-227-7028. A Persian and Oriental Carpet Broker who knows the bonded warehouses like his own backyard. Besides guiding customers through the stock or tracking down specific rugs he will also value and repair rugs.

David Black Oriental Carpets, 26 Portland Road, London W11. Tel: 071-727-2565. Oriental Rug Gallery, 43 Verulam Road, St Albans, Hertfordshire. Tel: 0727-41046. Christopher Farr, 115 Regents Park Road, London NW1. Tel: 071-585-5584.

In the depths of Gloucestershire some of the finest Tibetan rugs in the world can be found. Alain Rousseau, who runs Crossing Cottage Galleries, has made it his business to keep the old skills of rug-making alive and well in some of the Tibetan communities that fled to Nepal in the early 1960s after the Chinese invasion.

So many of the families were refugees who had to provide rugs quickly to earn enough money to survive and they often had to adapt their designs to please Western tastes but I was not interested in that - I wanted authentic Tibetan designs made from handspun Tibetan sheep wool, with natural vegetable dyes.

Tibetan sheep wool is the finest wool in the world. It takes the natural dyes beautifully and the rugs will last longer than any of us. I have about 30 families who work for me and I pay them in advance and give them traditional Tibetan tools and materials from old records, from monasteries or from old pattern-books, which I ask them to follow faithfully.

"I want to keep the tradition going and make sure the skills and designs don't get lost."

The results are gloriously authentic rugs, of different designs and sizes - each rug is labelled with the details of the dyes used (walnut, rhubarb, indigo) and all are hand-knotted. Patterns range from figures to geometric or floral motifs and vary in price from £150 to £3,500. Alain Rousseau has some 300 different designs that can be produced and, at any given time, the galleries carry about 50 of them.

The rugs are at Crossing Cottage Galleries, Todenham, near Moreton-in-Marsh, Gloucestershire. GL66 8NU.

End-of-term talent spots

IT IS THAT time of year again; out of design and art schools comes a new generation of young designers, filled with fresh ideas and eager for work.

In the bad old days, one used to tremble for them, wondering whether all that exuberant talent would ever get a chance to blossom. These days, times may be hard and business in dire straits, but at least their work gets an airing.

Nowadays most colleges have open days when the work of the graduating students is on view and, often, on sale (although whether turning end-of-term open days into selling exhibitions is a good idea is open to question). Many have increasingly professional and public relations which means few genuine talents risk being undiscovered.

For the second year running The Business Design Centre at Islington Green, London N1, is hosting an exhibition of some of the best work from young graduates and this year's exhibition runs from July 11-14.

Anyone interested in design for its own sake should certainly go. Most particularly, potential employers and patrons, who might need new products to expand their ranges, new designers graphic artists or illustrators to join their teams, should make a point of being there.

Besides being a splendid visual treat showing what young designers are up to, and keeping one in touch with current thinking, it is also an excellent source of presents - scarves, jewellery, shoes or lighting, rugs, furniture, silver or ceramics.

You could pick up some executive toys for as little as £10 a pair, some vibrantly coloured wastepaper baskets at about £37 each, Lycra shirts at £20 and plenty more at under £50.

Do not think that much of the work will be crude and ill-developed - all of it has had to pass fairly stringent panels and you will see the best work from colleges all over the UK.

Look out for an even more refined exhibition of students' work in the autumn when Zeev Aram of Aram Designs in Covent Garden's Kean Street, gives over his showrooms to the crème de la crème of student work.

He spends much of the summer going to almost every student show and in the autumn displays only the very best work. I will keep you posted on dates.

* Admission free for trade visitors, students and OAPs, £3 for others.

Golden bottle by Marianne Buis of West Surrey College of Art and Design, £140.

Birch and plywood chaise upholstered in calico and rejoicing in the name of "temptation", £250 by Nicola Adamson from the Parnham School

IT MUST BE TIME FOR THE ALFRED DUNHILL SALE.

dunhill

Visit Alfred Dunhill at Duke Street, James's, Burlington Arcade, 11 Sloane Street, Harrods and Selfridges.

LvdP

SOMETHING TO DO BETWEEN WIMBLEDON AND HENLEY.

The 27th of June is a day for devotees of The Season to note.

For it heralds the start of The Summer Sale at Swaine & Adeney. And great classics, which must not be missed.

Some of the up to 50% on selected attaché cases and leather goods, and if you have ever dreamed of owning one of our self-lined lid-over-body umbrellas, we're offering the chance of a wallet, worth £75, gratis.

Shirley, wishing to purchase a Brigg umbrella, will act as we will be giving away a collapsible model as a companion-piece.

In our ladies' and gentlemen's clothing departments there are substantial reductions. Thorndale's jackets are now half the usual price. For example, The Navigator is reduced from £78 to £39.

Some beautiful hand-knitted English silk reduced from £65 to £39.99.

And polo shirts are down to just £9.99.

An American customer of ours observed "when the going gets tough, the tough go shopping."

We are glad of the better place to start.

THE SUMMER SALE

Swaine & Adeney

PICCADILLY · LONDON · 071-734 4277

Established 1750.

ESSENTIAL EQUIPMENT. WHATEVER THE SEASON.

Sale Hours: 9.00-7.00 Thurs 27th June. Otherwise: 9.00-6.00 Everyday Sunday.

Getting a sunless tan

THAT strange object that began to appear in the sky on Thursday is called the sun. If past experience is anything to go by it is likely to bring all manner of rejoicing, including a profusion of leak-white legs.

Those of us who ever getting enough of these elusive sun-rays to acquire a tan who live in hotter climates call a tan could try a self-tanning lotion instead. Overnight those pale limbs can be toasted a reasonably realistic shade of tan.

Many of the self-tanning lotions on the market are much improved and, if applied with some care, produce an even, natural look. Two good ones are the Bui's Jet Bronze (£7.14 for 200 ml) and Estée Lauder's Self-Tanning Lotion (£11 for 125 ml).

ONE OF America's oldest and most distinguished stationery companies, Crane, has brought its wares to the UK.

No need to worry about how many are cut down in your letter-writing needs, the company's paper is made entirely from cotton fibres.

It was as Crane's paper that invitations for the dedication of the Statue of Liberty were engraved, many an urgent letter from The White House penned on its writing-paper and the US currency is printed on it.

A few of our best stationery shops are selling a range of the paper - prices are what you would expect to pay for high-quality stationery. It comes hand-bordered with hairline lines. Envelopes are lined and there all the special touches that some require from their stationery.

This is the paper for writing the most ardent love-letters and the most heart-felt thanks. It is stocked by: The Stationery Department, 131 Regent Street, London SW1 4SW; Thomas Goode & Company, 19 South Audley Street, London W1Y 8BN; The Walton Street Stationery Company, 37 Walton Street, London SW3 2HP; Paperland, 111 Fulham Road, London SW3 6LN; and Liberty's.

Ralph Lauren has not been to Africa but that has not stopped him conjuring up a deep and powerful image of a safari woman.

Safari woman wears elegant white and pale beige lodggers, the dress surrounded by the finest muslin mosquito nets and neatly at hand, has an exquisite crystal cut-glass scent bottle holding the perfect perfume - Safari (designed, of course, by Ralph Lauren).

Nobody seems to have worked out what effect it might have on the wildlife in the bush but never mind that, back here in London it smells a treat.

The bottles are lovely - made from old Victorian cut-glass scent bottles, with silver-effect stopper and mock-crocodile brown packaging. To my hypercritical nose it is one of the very nicest of all the new perfumes to come out in recent times, one of the few I would actually buy.

For those to whom the list of ingredients means something, it has (among others) taget, oranges, indes, jacinthe accord, mandarine, rose de mai, fleur d'orange with undertones of patchouli, vetiver, bois de cedre and musk.

It is exotic, but not too exotic, rich but not too rich and, above all, not so loud or strong as to infringe on others' nasal rights. It is, sadly, very expensive - cheapest version is £30 for 20ml Cologne spray, £150 for 150ml of the perfume and £250 for the largest 500ml perfume. It is on sale at Harrods of Knightsbridge and the Ralph Lauren Boutique, 143 New Bond Street, London W1. From September it will be at Selfridges and Harvey Nichols.

FOOD & DRINK

Toast the recession with some underpriced gems

There are plenty of bargains in the bins. Jancis Robinson picks the best from both sides of the globe

THE FOLLOWING wines, for various reasons, are cheaper than they should or could be.

Australian wine

Practically all wine exported from Australia is underpriced, thanks to the flaky performance of the Australian dollar and the dire state of the market in Australia. Oversupply has led to frenetic price wars in the bottle shops of Sydney and Melbourne and is courting export orders. Even though Australian wine production is less than a tenth of that in either France or Italy, and barely a third of that in the US, no other wine producing country offers such a variety of consistently well-made wines that are available in Britain for £2.95 to £4.95 a bottle. Oddities' fidelity to Australia has paid off and the chain can field by far the most exciting range in this price bracket, demonstrating that a buyer halfway round the world once or twice a year is no extravagance. Penfolds Bin 3 Shiraz/Mataro 1989 is a more recent vintage of one of their early Oz bargains and costs just £3.95 from Oddbins and £3.99 Fuller's wine shops. Mataro is the same as Mourvèdre, America's trendiest grape variety, this full, spicy red would be a luxury-priced Rhône Ranger if it were made in California. And there is no shortage of white wine bargains from Australia, especially for those prepared to stray off the Chardonnay trail. Those interested in slightly more serious Australian wine should look for a special of Lay Wheeler of Colchester (0206-764446) or visit the Australian Wine Centre in the Strand, London WC2.

De Luze burgundies

If you suddenly had 10,000 cases of burgundy to sell, and for complicated reasons could label only with the name of a standard Bordeaux merchant, you would probably offer the wine quite cheaply. Such is the case at Laytons 5081, retailing through André Simon which acquired a job lot of red and white burgundies from the superior 1986 vintage. The wines were bought originally for the French chain Nicolas but inter-company machinations left them languishing in Savigny-les-Beaune until Laytons came to the rescue. This means that most of the reds tend to be higher, purer style favoured by French palates (as opposed to the more obviously cockle-warming style of red burgundy favoured by the likes of Averys of Bristol and Auberson Waugh). Some of the whites determinedly embrace the cellar smells apparently beloved by the French. There are real bargains here however, notably in reds such as lively, fruity Savigny-les-Beaune 1985 for £7.85 as part of a mixed dozen (£9 per single bottle); a rather darker, jammy Cote de Nuits Villages 1985 at £7.94 (£8.75); a surprisingly light and juicy Nuits-St-Georges 1985 for £12.53 (£14.40) for drinking now; and a fine, concentrated, very true Gevrey-Chambertin, Combettes 1986 for drinking over the next two years at £11.50 (about £13.50). The wines carry the Lay label, but will be from decanting.

Wines auction

As during any downturn, now is the time to buy fine wine (particularly in New Zealand, I am told, but perhaps that is taking bargain-hunting a bit far). Middle-aged wines, in that happy no-merchant's land between overpriced infancy and overpriced antiquity, offer the most tempting value. I know I will regret not snapping up some 1982, 1983 and, especially, 1986 claret on offer at Christie's and Sotheby's. And there is even better value to be had in vintage port, being sold in quite large quantities.

Vouvray 1989-90

Europe is awash with absolutely gorgeous sweet white wines made by the hot new Vouvray. They plumped up the prices of Sauternes, Monbazillac, Aligote, Chenin Blanc vine reigns over appellations such as Montlouis, Quarts de Chaume, Saumur, Bonnezeaux, Coteaux de Layon and, most plentifully abroad, Vouvray. The most famous producers such as Gaston Huet, Foreau and Marc Breffat have accordingly plumped up the prices of their ultra-sweet moelleux wines to take account of the exceptional nature of these vintages, perhaps the best the wine-makers will see in their lifetimes. But no-one seems to have told Bernard Fouquet, whose 15-hectare Domaine des Aubuslères produces some of Vouvray's largest quantities. You can buy his sensational 1990 Cuvée des Grains - either Le Marigny or, for the long term, Cuvée Alexandre - for little more than £10 a bottle from Adams of Southwold, Gauntleys of Nottingham and Dillies. Both wines probably should be kept but the Marigny is available with cheese. Sec and demi-sec versions, around £8 a bottle are drier but the ripeness of the fruit makes them vibrate in the glass.

German wines

Unloved, therefore underpriced, but the last three vintages should not be underestimated.

Food school which balances the books

Nicholas Lander visits a college where business is on the menu

I HAVE just had a good meal in an organisation currently bucking all the economic trends. It is consistently full, profitable and one of its restaurants is booked next month. It has no trouble recruiting staff nor finding customers in spite of offering four different types of restaurant and reasonable prices. And it does not depend on any restaurant guide books. The four restaurants make up the public face of the Birmingham College of Food which, with 1,600 students and 175 teaching staff, is one of the largest specialist catering colleges in Europe. The college owes its appeal to changes wrought over the past five years by Eddie McIntyre, its principal, formerly a chef at the Dorchester Hotel in London, and his two heads of department, Bob Heath and David Luke. They realised that to attract the best students they had to offer the training that would secure jobs, and to attract sponsorship and interest they would have to offer industry exactly what it was looking for - well-trained, eager staff. They have turned the college from one that was classroom based to one that is kitchen based. Their intake, mainly 18-year-olds with perhaps no more than two GCSEs, are ushered in one September morning and put straight to work. The rota might allow a newcomer no more time than that necessary to get into their whites before he, or she, is serving lunch to fellow students. By the end of September even the first-year students will be serving and cooking for the public under academic supervision. They will also have been put on the early morning rota which will take them around Birmingham wholesale market while their colleagues stay warm and work the computerised stock and goods system. By the end of their second year, aged 18, they will be smoking their own salmon and preparing a pepper steak, finished on a flame dish at the table, in the main dining restaurant. During the course of the academic year these restaurants, and other retail outlets in the college, such as a bakery shop, contribute almost £500,000 to the college's annual income of £5m. Nothing the students prepare is wasted; once cooked, it is chilled and then sold. Heath boasts that with this system he has a raw material cost close to zero but that disposing of 200 gallons of Scotch broth in a week, one of the dishes the first year students make, can be a problem. The college has also been in the right place at the right time. In the mid-1980s Birmingham City Council decided to go after the leisure and entertainment industry. The National Exhibition Centre was the start, the recently opened International Conference Centre the most recent addition. Over the past three years 3,500 hotel bedrooms have been built in the West Midlands. The city council and local education authority have been enthusiastic supporters of the college financially and, in turn, the college has supplied waiters, chefs and managers to the Motor Show and the Edgbaston Test. As well as providing its own staff, the college has undertaken a large part of the pre-recruitment training for the staff at the nearby Copthorne Hotel and at the Conference Centre and have run courses during the summer - when the college is closed - to hoteliers and restaurateurs on the Food Safety Act.

But tucked away on the college's third floor is the biggest surprise. The large number of Indian, Chinese and Pakistani restaurants in the city means that the college has developed the first purpose-built training centre for the cooking of "ethnic food" in the UK. There is a tandoor oven, a pizza oven and pasta making machine, and, at the far end of the kitchen, a range of six stainless steel Chinese woks, three of them with turbo burners exactly like those found in top Chinese restaurants. All these feed the Continental Restaurant where, for about £3 per head, you can eat dishes from around the world. I was there during Spanish week when the dishes from their tapas bar - squid, chorizo sausage, grilled prawns - were explained to me by a first year student from Ireland. The college's restaurants are open Tuesday to Friday, with public demand steadily increasing for the evening trade. Mondays are reserved for the students' courses and to allow the students to practise all the social skills necessary in dealing with the general public. During the year the college is frequently used as a venue for lunches and dinners and the students deal with clients over the menu, wines and seating arrangements. On the notice board are glowing testimonials from Birmingham City for a lunch party, from All Nippon Airways after a successful karaoke evening, and from the Birmingham branch of the National Council of Women after a much-appreciated dinner. All testified that 1991 had been a rewarding year for the college. Birmingham College of Food, Summer Row, Birmingham B3 1JB. Tel: 021-256 4076.

First-class courses: a lecturer and student prepare food at the Birmingham College of Food

Eating out in France

The bourgeoisie win again

THE gastronomic scene changes remarkably from time to time. The chic of business, or worse, of fashion, which you may have felt to have been a good place a few years ago is now scorned by Parisian friends. It is best to take fresh advice or buy the latest guide before you head for the old haunts. The 20th century has continued to take its toll of Paris' great institutions. In the place de la Madeleine for example, businesses have been taking over the sites of leading restaurants and turning them into offices. Japanese restaurants have been particularly worrying developments on the square and its most famous restaurant, Lucas Carton. When I lived in Paris the city's most talked about restaurant was the one in the rue de Valenciennes. Then the news came that the big restaurant had abandoned L'Archevêque for the rue de Valenciennes. Later we learned that Sanderens had sold to the Japanese who had replaced his services in the kitchen. The latest report is that the owners of the new restaurant are planning to move the lease. What is to happen to Sanderens and Lucas Carton? The Japanese, it is said, are not behind one of the mutations in this part of Paris: the virtual destruction of the Cité Berruyer to make way for a hotel. The Cité used to be a perfect Parisian street in the 19th century. Now the little street is a fishmonger, a wine-merchant, only its up-market restaurant, Le Moulin Village survives, determined not to yield to development. Le Moulin is owned by Englishman Mark Williamson who with his partner Tim Jancis runs the successful wine-bar-cum restaurant Will's in the rue de la Chapelle and in the rue de Valenciennes. It was their advice I took when I decided to eat what was in vogue in Paris. I wanted a restaurant which had recently opened and another which had been well-reviewed. Mark and Tim sent me off to the Manufacture in Issy-les-Moulineaux for the first of my requests. Years ago I used to work in Issy, a leafy grey suburb just behind the big railway station, the Gare de St-Lazare. Now, with businesses taking advantage of lower rents in the suburbs, Issy has come up in the world. Le Manufacture is actually in a former cigarette factory which has been converted by Steve Rydel. The menu was modern, varied and innovative with a few specialties added daily. A millefeuille of beef with horseradish sauce from practically raw meat was particularly successful while packets of asparagus and leeks turned out to be no packets at all and rather pointless. The shin of veal en jumble was not an addition to the old recipe for soup served by Paul Bocuse in Lyon. If anything it looked more like a spring newarin with its garnish of fresh peas. The plate was exquisite in look and the dish itself light for all its spring verdure.

The cheese board was an example of minimalist four well-selected cheeses including Livarot and Reblochon. The desserts were well thought out: a prelat of chocolate with cream and an interesting croquants of apple flavoured with rosemary. With enough wine the meal came to about £40 a head, which is not cheap by Parisian standards. Le Manufacture is of interest if you are doing business in the area, personally I should hesitate to make the detour again.

The second restaurant recommended by Mark and Tim was not sure by any stretch of the imagination. Astier, in the scruffy 11th arrondissement, looks as if it has been there since the beginning of time. As a traditional Parisian bistro, Astier upholds the traditions of la cuisine bourgeoise. At lunchtime there is a FF120 menu offering four courses of wine. I chose herring fillets with warm potatoes and was brought a deep terrine and told to help myself. My next choice was an unashamedly rich chunk of smoked Morteau sausage and a bowl of green beans from Le Puy. There was nothing minimal about the cheese course: some 50 cheeses in good condition. I finished with a very simple flan with Mirabelle plums. With coffee, water and half a bottle of well-chosen Beaujolais the wine bill came to the £18. Indeed, apart from the obvious dining room to the west, Astier seems to be pleasantly tucked away in a time warp as far as Paris is concerned. Long may it remain so. Information: Le Manufacture, 20 rue de Valenciennes, Issy-les-Moulineaux (closed Sun 11am-10pm) 44 rue Jean Pierre, Timbaud, 75011 Paris. Tel: 01 46 35 07 35 or 43 38 26 56.

Giles MacDonogh

Appetisers

THERE ARE still some restaurants apparently more interested in their customers' wallets than their well-being, as a visit to the Bombay Brasserie, London SW7, proved, writes Nicholas Lander. We went because they claim to be featuring dishes from the various, and varied, regions of India but left disappointed. The waiter failed to provide us with the regional menu until after we had ordered and the large sign at the bottom of the menu "minimum charge £20" did not encourage us to linger. As we sat down the waiter placed four unolicited popadums on the table - an original stimulus to the bar takings - and something we saw happen at all the other tables. These same popadums, however, then appeared in the middle of the items on the bill charged at £1. The restaurant is large and busy and probably fills 200 tables a night, seven nights a week. This easy contribution to the weekly takings of £1,500, or £75,000 in a good year, should not be allowed in a restaurant that is the flagship of Taj International Hotels. Potatoes are too easily neglected both at home and in the restaurant. At home we are too lazy or too conservative to experiment; in the restaurant chefs tend to leave this versatile vegetable to the newest, and most inexperienced, member of the brigade. In 1989 Lindsay Barham began to put this to rights with her book In Praise of the Potato but, sadly, the publishers only issued it in hardback. Now Graffham has released it as a paperback at £5.99. Less than a kilometre from the airport for Toulouse, in Blagnac, which lends its name to the airport, is Michel Pujol's restaurant (tel: 01 71 71 13 55) which would make an auspicious start to any holiday. The price of the main course (from FF150 to FF200 French) allows you to help yourself as often as you like to the first courses on the buffet and dessert. A barbecue is the highlight.

CLIENT WISHES TO DISPOSE OF CELLAR CONTENTS

Rare Domaine bottled Burgundies Classic vintages 1966/69 76 78 79 82 85 and 86. Including premier cru. Prices from as little as 25.50 a bottle ex VAT. Classified growth Classic vintages Pons and Champagne. Also award winning single vineyard Cognac. Grand Fine Champagne VSOP 515.00 & XO 520.00 a bottle ex VAT. Client willing to mix cases. Contact Dore Russell and Dale 0429 64515 Fax 0429 65222

THE SPAIN JUST WAITING TO BE DISCOVERED
WINES FROM SPAIN, 66 CHILTERN STREET, LONDON W1M 1PR

Yachting/Keith Wheatley

The battle for the America's Cup is taking its toll even on multi-millionaires in Newport during the 1983 regatta.

Clash o

In a waterfront shed at East Cowes, on the Isle of Wight, the nonwere "adopted" by the successful Australian opposition.

"We did have one or two surprises haps too many billions of lire have been spent to pull out now.

gazed down on us from the mantelshelf, distracting the eye from the Monet near the front door. This man

Meanwhile, ■ San Diego, Koch has already got through three helmets, a $5m yacht built in complete secrecy at a Utah aerospace facility that will be scrapped as unsuitable - and $28m in spending money.

"Yet their profits are not as high as you think. Their average net profit - some earn below it - is 3 per cent of turnover after costs, betting duty and levies, but before corporation tax and interest charges. If betting shop deductions had to be raised beyond the 10 per cent

'The bookies are competing against the punters for pot of cash'

And ■ Sandown today a star-packed field will whizz to the finishing line in the Eclipse Stakes. The ruling Maktoum family of Dubai, which has poured uncouncted millions into British racing, will be represented by Stagecraft and Marju; ■ Dowager Lady Beaverbrook, an elegant and popular old stick, will see her famous colours (beaver brown and maple-leaf green) carried by Terimon; and Roger Charlton and Prince Khalid Abdullah will stare transfixed as Sanglamoore throws down his challenge. For the centuries-old business of horse-racing, it will be magic-as-usual.

the belt,
the law

It appears that a lot of people do not know the law. Many think that young children travelling in cars without rear seat belts would be safer sitting on their parents' laps than left unrestrained in the back. They would not be safer — and this also happens to be illegal under the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 (b). Roughly half of Britain's motorists are also said to believe mistakenly that children under seven are not allowed to travel in a car's allowed to travel in a car's front seat. They also think it is all right for them to travel unrestrained in the back of a car that does have rear seat belts.

fastened-in. That means safety seats for infants and toddlers, wearing the ordinary seat belt (with booster cushion if necessary) for older children. And if the car does have rear seat belts, they must be worn by child and adult passengers alike.

S.M.

Graf and Sabatini renew their rivalry at Wimbledon today

Last September it was Sabatini who took away her US Open crown with a spectacular display of volleying that impressed all who saw it. This year has been no better. After a heavy loss to Jana Novotna in the Australian quarter-finals came the crushing 6-0 6-2 semi-final defeat in Sebatini is CONFIDENT her time has come. Following her 6-4 8-4 baseline victory over the 15-year-old American, Jennifer Capriati, she said: "I'm pretty confident mentally. It's going to be a tough match. I know that, but I have done well in our last matches. I'm very excited to play

Sadly, it is a move that cannot be

This was achieved by reducing the men's doubles to the best of three sets until the quarter-finals and by halving the boys' and girls' doubles to 16 pairs in each. On Wednesday, 102 matches were played, the second highest number ever, only 14 short of the total played on the second had not lost a set and had his streak of wins on grass to 17 matches - seven at Wimbledon last year, five at Queen's Club and five more at Wimbledon this year.

He has excelled in all departments, especially in timing his returns of serve and covering the old German is curiously ill at ease on a surface that is made for his powerful game. Before yesterday he had dropped a set in each of his last three matches, and on Thursday might have lost to the left-handed Frenchman, Guy Forget, if two points had gone the other way.

luminous contours (beaver brown) and maple-leaf green) carried by Terimon; and Roger Charlton and Prince Khalid Abdulah will stare transfixed as Sanglamore throws down his challenge. For the centuries-old business of horse-racing, it will be magic-as-usual.

Stuart Marshall on the arrival of 500 Mazdas made in Pretoria

the new Fiat Tempra station wagon last month, or Lancia, the compact Hyundai executive saloon from Korea that took my fancy last week.

for a 5-door hatchback
$5,695 for a 4-door saloon. I think it's matching some British private buyers' requirements, too. It is being mar-

There will be a number of Saabs in Britain. It is no vehicle common in South Africa - few thousand Ford P1000 picked in the late 1970. And this is not the no limit on the enzymes entering the first light

the new from we received a ortina-derived rps from there and early 1980s.
a foot but the

and rebadged as would be wanted. Comes well equipped and is a real thing of fines, not a cheap one. Or

GT
ood last oon ion, kes,
igh.
ove
ive

these special safety belts for the very young; seat belts, with booster cushions if need be, for older children.

All cars and taxis registered since 1987 have had to have rear seat belts fitted. Many older cars were produced with mounting points installed but the Department of Transport

This is not so. Under-sevens may legally ride in the front seat but only if suitably fastened-in. That means safety seats for infants and toddlers.

MOTORS

Mitsubishi Sigma

Automatic, April 1991 finished in Cavalier Green with Gray leather. Standard equipment includes electric sunroof, electric windows, central locking, power steering, stereo cassette with CD player, air distribution. The sports motor car has been runed through 6500 miles and is offered with the balance of 3 year Warranty for $24,950. Please telephone 0932 867911 at anytime during the weekend.

We are just 2 minutes off Junction 11 of the M25.

MotorWay
WEYBESIDE

MITSUBISHI
MOTOR CARS

According to John Benazzer, MCL group chairman, the Sanza offers Japanese-style build quality at an affordable price. He thinks it will make friends among motorists who are not looking for anything stylish or complicated but just want a reliable, well-specified car.

less refined than the real thing but, having bigger engines, not at all bad as tow cars. Or spoke of selling 10,000 Lonsdales a year but the market thought otherwise and it all fizzled out after a year or two. The Sao Paulo will, I suspect, do rather better than the Lonsdale. But you get the same familiarly specified rivals as the Ford Orion, Rover and VW Jetta and it looks value.

older cars were produced with mounting points installed but the Department of Transport reckons about 60 per cent of all cars have rear belts now.

The proportion will go up as old vehicles are scrapped and pre-1987 cars are voluntarily fitted with rear belts. By the mid-1990s the vast majority of Britain's car fleet will be equipped. In the meantime, rear seat riders seat but only if suitably fastened in. That means safety seats for infants and toddlers, wearing the ordinary seat belt (with booster cushion if necessary) for older children. And if the car does have rear seat belts, they must be worn by child and adult passengers alike.

S M

Wear the belt, learn the law

IF YOUR rear passengers are not belting up, they should be. The new law making rear seat belt wearing compulsory came into effect in the UK on Monday. Unbelted back seat passengers are now liable to a £16 fixed penalty ticket or a fine of £100 if they decide to argue the case before a court.

The rule applies to taxis as well as cars.

It is up to adult passengers themselves to wear the belts. Drivers, though, continue to be responsible for ensuring that children under the age of 14 riding in the back are "properly restrained." That also happens to be illegal under the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 (b).

Roughly half of Britain's motorists are also said to believe mistakenly that children under seven are not allowed to travel in a car's means special safety seats for the very young; seat belts, with booster cushions if need be, for older children.

All cars and taxis registered since 1987 have had to have rear seat belts fitted. Many older cars were produced with mounting rubbers installed but

The proportion will go up as old vehicles are scrapped and pre-1987 cars are voluntarily fitted with rear belts. By the mid-1990s the fleet will be equipped. In the meantime, rear seat riders

PERSPECTIVES/GARDENING

As they say in Europe

A war of words without ceasefires

ONE CAN learn a lot about a country from the newspapers. There is fighting in Slovenia but the copy of Delo from Ljubljana arrives regularly, at most a day late. The Serbian papers have not been seen for weeks.

The press in Yugoslavia is much given to extremism and sensationalism so what do they do in a world where the extreme and the sensational are the norm? Volko Fieger, under the heading "Total War" had a go in Delo. "Whoever fails to recognise that this is a war between the fundamental forces of civilisation and barbarism, in which the bells toll for everyone, has to take responsibility for that decision."

The day before, the main editorial was headed "Slovenia will never surrender" and it ran: "The Yugoslav Army, or at least the cynical generals with a taste of unlimited power in their Belgrade headquarters, is implementing extraordinarily brutal aggression against Slovenia. It is merely a replica of the Soviet attack on Prague in pre-historic times."

The Serbs seem to have put forward a number of contradictory arguments about the justice of their cause. Or maybe the Slovenes are making up contradictory stories about the Serbs. Delo quotes a General Kadjevic as saying that Italy supports a united Yugoslavia in response to German and Austrian aspirations in the north-west of the country, even that Germany is seeking to create a Fourth Reich but is opposed by the US and the Soviet Union.

Another story emerged when the Rome daily, La Repubblica sent its man to Gorizia. That town lies smack on the border; one crosses the curiously named Blood Creek to Nova Gorica on the other side. There the Slovene mayor told La Repubblica that a "top secret army High Command document," which had been found in Ljubljana, said that Austria and Italy were massing on the border ready to move in and take over. The mayor said, "It's a lie to justify the brutal invasion."

For many, Slovenia may be a far away country of which we know nothing, but for others it is right next door. In the pages of the Italian media the fighting became a spectator sport. Nothing has been seen like it in Europe since 1937 when crowds gathered in the frontier town of Hendaye in France to watch the Spanish civil war rage in ruin.

In Austria there is the same feeling of close involvement. The Slovenes are beloved but are always preferable to Serbs. In Vienna, Die Presse, on the anniversary of the shooting of Archduke Franz-Ferdinand in Sarajevo in 1914, came down firmly on the side of the separatists and then started to look for convenient blame. That paper had condemned the anti-Americanism that manifested itself in Austria during the Gulf war but found it provided a useful subject for an editorial this week.

Human rights, freedom, democracy, self-determination, protection from the communist menace. We have heard it all and the echoing call about "Shared Values." For years this has never been missing from the speeches of American politicians in Europe. And we Europeans trusted them. The great majority of Europeans believe even today - and in fact even more strongly than before - in human rights, freedom, democracy, self-determination and anti-Communism. But it is hard to believe that the United States is still the foremost defender of the values. The Slovene crisis provides yet another burden for the relations between Europe and the America. Today's America has interests, but has it really still got ideals?

Now this was very odd. On the same day, the Polish daily, Rzeczpospolita wrote: "In view of the flow of blood the West is naturally seeking to modify its stand in favour of the Yugoslav federation. . . we are reminded however of the tragic principle expressed by Churchill, 'Nations have no friends, only interests.'"

The papers of the region seem to have been ahead of west European political leaders. They accepted the end of Yugoslavia as we know it some time before such a possibility was even mentioned in the capitals of the Community.

If the Polish paper took up one theme from Die Presse, Delo took up another: "Americans are religiously celebrating the 4th of July. Such festivals are unique. In other words, freedom and democracy are reserved for Americans alone and whoever wants to join the club has to get American permission."

James Morgan

James Morgan is Economics Correspondent of the BBC World Service.

the Louis mystery. Moscow News notes that he was born in 1928, has a British wife, Jennifer Statham Louis, and was Moscow correspondent for the Sunday Express.

The report continued: "Victor Louis was well known among narrow circles of the Moscow intelligentsia in the 1960s and 70s. Opinions of his KGB connections vary. Some people said it was a gentleman's agreement between the two sides: this country allegedly needed at least one free journalist to show the West we had freedom too."

"Others believed him to be a double agent used by both the East and the West while he skillfully manoeuvred between two paymasters. Some were sure Louis was bluffing: he did not work for either side and pretended to have connections in high places. His job with a second-rate British newspaper was considered a screen. It was his British wife who did the work while he ran errands for her."

James Morgan

James Morgan is Economics Correspondent of the BBC World Service.

Robin Lane Fox picks self-seeding plants for informal gardens while Arthur Hellyer admires the beauties of the little-known Hyde Hall

Foxing formality

YEARS AGO, English gardeners hit on the idea of informal planting in gardens of formal design. It remains an inspiration to most of us whose gardens are not in such settings that gardening is either wild or supercilious. In this style, the grand plan of the garden remains firm and formal, without curves, waves and fancy shapes: the plants within the formality are on the verge of a wilderness, about to go out of control.

The informal style of planting welcomes plants which seed themselves without swamping everything else in sight: among my favourites are aquilegias in May and violets throughout early summer, the bright pink soapwort, a neglected plant nowadays, evening primroses for the later months, in pale lemon-yellow and masses of the blue autumn crocuses speciosus, ready for planting this month and one of the outstanding bargains in bulb merchants' lists.

This month, you can set out on a future of informality by sowing two of the earliest plants in the book. To my eye, it has been a foxy summer dominated so far by foxgloves and fox relations while the old-fashioned roses have been forced and browned by the rain.

Among their old roses, connoisseurs like to use foxgloves because their vertical spikes of flower are such a contrast and stand up between bushes. Foxgloves seed themselves informally without becoming a nuisance, but they are best when limited to particular colours.

The best colours are white and apricot, ready for sowing this month in any old corner where you can make seed-trail and remember to water it if the weather sets fair. Foxgloves will come up by the hundred, but then you need to know a trick or two.

The apricot forms seem easy enough. I much prefer the stronger form from Thompson and Morgan, of Ipswich, Suffolk, to the better-known Seeds. The apricot variety is taller and more imposing. Unfortunately, the colour is not stable and if you keep your apricot seedlings for a second or third year, many will revert to plain old purple. They have to be sown like biennials and grown for every other year, but they are so exceptionally easy that anyone can cope with them for minimal effort.

By the end of the decade, there may be a widespread shortage of foxgloves in association with Terry Baker at Rookery Nursery, Alwinton, Melksham. From a local Wiltshire garden,

Informal planting welcomes plants which seed themselves

he is offering a foxglove called Gloria de Romandey which is apricot pink, about two feet high and perennial. Plants are not available by post but if this oddity catches on, it will have a good future.

Meanwhile, it is back to the seed packet. Seeds of white foxgloves are widely available, but you need to know their little secret. They will intermingle with every other colour on the sowing-still, but when the seedlings are a month or so old, watch out for those which are showing a purple flash on the stems or leaves.

They will grow into purple flowers, not white, and should be thrown out at once, in order to keep a white majority by sparsely among the foxglove family.

This summer, we have seen these plants' supreme virtue: they are able to stand up without supports in heavy rain.

At a lower level, I have hit on a happy companion which is fox in a different sense and much less common in informal gardens. The family of codonopsis is not widely known, but I can picture its best varieties at home in the Himalayas where their pale blue bells must stand out against a sky of variegated blue. Almost all the forms are worth growing, but the climbing Codonopsis flora and the clear blue flora are special.

They look like impressive rarities, specially if you examine the insides of their hanging, pale flowers: their inner lobes are ringed with markings of orange, brown and black, as if they had been fingered by an unexpected fox. It is their scent, however, which is fox in the strongest sense.

A codonopsis usually dies quickly down after flowering, but if you are nearby when growth is starting again, you cannot miss the plant's position. One touch of it will scent your sleeve and half the flower bed, the authentic scent of what a farmer described to me on a mindlessly cold day last January as "one of the bushy-tailed jobs".

Seeds of some good codonopsis are stocked by Chiltern Seeds in Cumbria. I recommend the family as an easy subject for anyone who likes informal formality and wants to be different. The result is usually a lightly trailing canopy of grey-blue stems up to two or three feet high which will appear usually through spring flowers which have passed their best. We all know foxgloves, but we forget these fox-scented companions for them.

They are completely hardy, lime-tolerant, easy and in spite of their popularity in Scotland, are flourishing with me in the south after two years of drought. They start to seed their foxes around the garden in a harmless way: I cannot imagine why we make so little of them, except for conservative ignorance and a wariness of plants which vanish after flowering and are not in a strong, familiar colour.

Helen says that you have not really got a garden that you can call your own until you

HERE IS a garden in Essex, well known in that county yet totally unknown to most gardeners in other parts of the country, which almost perfectly expresses what good gardening has been about for 30 years.

It is called Hyde Hall, an 18th century, timber-framed, half and plaster farmhouse. It must have been preceded by a much older building for there are the remains of a Tudor stable outside.

Dick and Helen Robinson came to Hyde Hall in 1955 to farm and it is still a working farm although the Robinsons retired in 1974 and the land and farm buildings are let. It stands on top of a small hill in typical south Essex country, gently rolling and not well protected with trees. When the Robinsons arrived there were just six trees and no garden. Today there must be at least 1,000 trees and a series of densely planted gardens as well looked after as any I know in England.

Helen has always been the prominent one in the garden but Dick, working quietly in the background, has his own favourite plants, including rhododendrons. He is expert in many others and knows as much about the garden and derives equal pleasure from its success as his wife.

There are many things that astonish me about Hyde Hall, apart from the quality of the gardening. This hopelessly exposed site should be impossible to grow any but the hardiest plants. But it grows a great many that are rather tender: Fremontodendron, California Glory, for example, shrubs in variety and the difficult big-leaved rhododendrons including fabulous R. macabeanum with monster trunks of cream flowers - this in a soil and situation completely unsuitable for rhododendrons. In fact the first the Robinsons planted died but that simply spurred them to plant the necessary evergreen trees for shelter and create an acid soil where previously there had been an alkaline one.

Helen says that you have not really got a garden that you can call your own until you

An inspiration to gardeners

Hyde Hall, Essex: it's what good gardening is all about have some self-sown seedlings. These they have in plenty; self-sown aquilegias and subulnates in a garden they made on that old Tudor stable floor, self-sown cyclamens in many not too densely shaded places, self-sown hellebores and many more.

But the most astonishing sight of all when I visited Hyde Hall recently were self-sown plants of Erigeron robustus.

For those unfamiliar with this majestic plant let me explain that it comes from mountainous regions of central Asia where climatic conditions can be impossibly extreme, that it has extraordinary fleshy roots spread out horizontally like a cartwheel, and boasts 7 ft or 8 ft flower stems covered for as much as 4 ft by their beautifully pale-pink or white flowers. Those at Hyde Hall are slowly taking charge of a large area of old roses. There must be more than 100 of them all self-sown. I have never seen anything like it but most of all I admire the wisdom of the Robinsons in letting the plants grow just where they germinated, inconvenient though this may seem in other ways.

If the Robinsons have a speciality it is roses. They grow over 1,000 varieties and they are just as happy with the modern ones as they are with old-fashioned roses which they probably grow in about equal numbers. An idea I like very much is what they call rope walk roses: a long row of posts joined by rope. Climbing roses are trained along the rope, pillar roses and clematis are trained up the posts and modern bush roses are planted between them, the whole producing a continuous screen of flowering plants. It is both novel and highly effective.

They also grow one of the National Collection of malus, or crab apple and also willows. There are two ponds; one the original farm pond now planted with water lilies and modern aquatic and waterlily plants. There is also an unusual mixed border divided into sections by yew hedges and a rock garden, a heather garden and an arboretum.

In a totally different area of the garden, where once the kept pigs, there is a large area where most of the ornamental apples grow plus many more, including many of the modern varieties that have the old-fashioned look.

There are also fine shrubs here and a weeping cedar which has been allowed to do just that from the moment it was planted. There is also a greenhouse for alpine and another used mainly for Australasian and Mediterranean plants.

In 1976 the garden was set up as a charitable trust which ensures its future.

The objectives are the cultivation and propagation of all kinds of garden plants, particularly those new to Britain, and the presentation of both classical and new horticultural practices to amateur gardeners and young professionals. It already attracts about 30,000 visitors a year but is worthy of twice that number.

Information: Hyde Hall is in Buckhatch Lane, Rettendon, Essex, off the A130 from Chelmsford to the main Southend road near Wickford. It is open from April to October on Wednesdays and Bank Holidays from 11am to 4pm and on Sundays from 10am to 4pm.

From the Financial Times

An invitation to a very special Garden Party

The Financial Times together with Garden Tours have negotiated an exceptionally fine tour of Madeira's beautiful gardens - with an emphasis both on quality and value for money.

You will not be surprised to find that we are staying at the famous Reid's Hotel (this year celebrating 100 years of service). We include Club Class Flights as standard, an expert tour leader, local guides, a number of private visits and an exclusive gala dinner.

Our programme of visits not only includes the world famous Quinta da Boa Sucesso with its botanical collections but also the magical Quinta do Palheiro where, at a greater altitude, you encounter cooler climates and discover an English Garden with many exotic surprises. We take in an orchid nursery, a fascinating plant research laboratory, and will have time to explore the vast array of naturalised vegetation and the remarkably beautiful "levada" irrigation system that waters the island.

To make the enjoyment complete our tour leader will be Mr Roy Cheek who is one of the most widely qualified people in horticulture. Over forty years he has held numerous posts and was Carator and senior lecturer at Canning College. He is a committee member of the Royal Horticultural Society, and is consultant to the BBC on the Victorian Flower Garden. Madeira is very familiar to him as he has led tours there on a number of occasions and has exhibited a collection of Madeiran plants at The Chelsea Flower Show.

Our eight-day tour commences at Gatwick Airport on the 13th November 1991. The price of £1250 includes Club Class flight, superior sea facing rooms, full itinerary, tour leader, all lectures and entrance fees, local guiding and meals mentioned in the full programme.

There can be few places on Earth that are so ideal for gardening... in Madeira both climate and geography conspire to provide conditions that are kind to plants and humans alike. At sea level sub-tropical species abound. Climbing higher, you will discover temperate varieties giving way to alpine, whilst on the wet northern coastline a great variety of ferns flourish in "designed conditions".

Quite predictably, the island has attracted the British who, for over a century, have come to indulge their gardening passions. Our tour permits us to indulge ourselves in the enjoyment of the fruit of their labours.

To Nigel Pullman
Financial Times
Number One
Southwark Bridge
London SE1
Please send me details on The Madeira Garden Tour
Title Initials Surname
Address
Postcode

Fishing

Summer, and other disasters

IT IS SOMETIMES said that adversity is good for the soul. I am inclined to keep an open mind on the question. But if it is true, I should be spiritually twice the man I was before the start of the trout fishing season.

I am not complaining, you understand. No one likes a whinger. I am merely recounting certain experiences in what I trust will be a balanced, factual manner. If there is a lesson from them - for instance, that a malignant fate has got in for me - I shall leave others to draw it.

Like many tragedies, it all began so brightly - in my case, with an invitation to fish the Test. Although I had seen the most celebrated trout stream in the world often enough - and marvelled at its beauty, if not at the way most of it is run - I had never fished it before.

The weather was blissful, the company splendidly congenial, the lunch an irresistible invitation to lingering excess, and the fishing - fun.

The water was thick with trout (many of them repeatedly fugitives from the intensively stocked Orvis beats above). If I am honest, I must say that they were almost over-obliging in the manner of taking the fly. Six in my rod by lunchtime was a reflection more of simple-mindedness on their part, rather than any skill on mine.

By the time I visited my local river, the Kennet, a few days later, the mood of the month had changed. No darling buds here, and precious little merriment; just a strong wind from the north and a sky like granite.

There are, in fishing, two species of bad summer weather. In the first half of June the weather was foul, but usefully foul, in that it poured with rain. But conditions in most of May combined all the disconcerting effects of cold and lack of sunshine with a total lack of the rain so desperately needed.

The Kennet was not happy. The water was at mid-summer level, but with that cheerless, flat darkness of winter, and showing an growth of weed. I fished virtually every yard of the fishery, both main river and side streams. There was no hatch of fly, no sign of fish, no inducement to cast.

A week later conditions were a little more encouraging. I had been told that the mayfly hatch - which can normally be relied upon to stir the trout into a frenzy of feasting in late May and early June - might have begun. It had not. But there were a few mayfly abroad, like heralds charged with sending out the invitations to the table. And the odd fish was moving.

I saw one surface greedily below a line of lime trees on one of the carriers, and with my second cast caught it. The old touch is coming back, I thought.

Then I spotted a movement beside the bank, where a branch from one of the trees swung low over the water. It was tricky to get the fly under the leaves and over the fish's nose. I was congratulating myself on bringing it off when the nose appeared, and the fly disappeared. I struck, and a sizeable trout burst into an invisible weedbed and broke me. I saw no more fish that day.

Contrived to miss most of the mayfly season. Others managed things more sanely. When I returned, a glance at the records book in the fishing hut revealed the usual gut - including two six pounders, one caught by a guest I ground my teeth. I have never even managed a four pounder.

But there was still a chance. The river was now looking more itself and where the trees gave protection from the blasting north-west wind, the may-fly were still hatching. Initially the trout - perhaps bloated after previous gorging - were reluctant to play the game, and ignored the insects fluttering above their heads. But after a time, temptation prevailed and they began to feed.

Two fish inside 30 minutes did wonders for my self-esteem. It was time, I told myself, to forsake these hard-earned stocked fish and hunt one of the leviathans. Three years before, I had hooked one of the giants, and although it broke me in a trice, I knew where to go.

It was a long walk, made additionally wearisome by the frequency with which my right sock separated itself from my foot inside my wader (why the other one should have stayed on is just one more of life's amusing little riddles).

When I finally reached my destination, I realised at once that the effort had been wasted. The wind - which I had fondly imagined was dropping - was as strong as ever, blowing straight down-stream. There was no fly, no sign of trout.

The climax to the tragedy is simply told. I saw what might have been - but probably was not - a rise. I cast at it. The wind blew my fly into a bank-side plant. I pulled at it. It wouldn't budge. I pulled harder. My rod, a split-cane, snapped. My companion these 30 years, snuggled close in two, beyond hope of repair.

I went home and kicked the dog. It was high time, I thought, for some other creature to endure a little adversity.

Tom Fort

TRAVEL

Paradise at $1,000 a night

On Lanai guests are free to move between the luxurious lodge (pictured) and the Menele Bay Hotel, signing as they go. The golf courses promise to be spectacular

VIRGINIA seemed to say it all.

"You can stand up straight, out of the sun and the rain, talk to new people. It's much better."

What it best was answering the same question for a back-breaking day, bending close to the red earth, cutting the spiky pineapples. Virginia - dignified, smiling - was our waitress for our first dinner at the Lodge at Koele. We thought she represented what was happening on this island of Lanai (pronounced lan-ee), the new and almost certainly last frontier of Hawaiian tourism. But time was to disclose wider perceptions.

Of the six inhabited Hawaiian islands, Lanai is the second smallest but is still as big as the Isle of Wight. Until last year it slumbered, oblivious to the frenzy of the visitor industry, growing across the waters.

Only the even smaller Niihau remained more private, long owned by a single family who cosset a few hundred native Hawaiians, preserve their language and exclude the outside world.

It was not until the 1960s that the volcanic mid-Pacific emerald isles saw a steep take-off in tourism which rapidly transformed the languid, colonial charm of Honolulu, on Oahu's south shore, clustering it with a gleaming Manhattan skyline dotted with palm trees.

As the tide of hotels and condominiums flowed into the so-called neighbour islands, Maui, the "Big Island" of Hawaii and Kauai sprouted luxury resort areas. Molokai was less invaded. Many of Hawaii's 6m invaders a year crash into the hotels clustered around Honolulu's Waikiki beach on Oahu. Within a few minutes' walk, though, is another world, that of the locals at play on the ample expanse of Kapiolani park. There families picnic, jog, make up casual baseball games, fly kites and throw footballs around. And, to our recent amazement, the several soccer pitches are occupied by pretty schoolgirls, earnestly attending their male coaches. Further afield, visitors who rent a car or ride the public bus ($1.20 to go round the island) find plentiful tastes of Oahu beach and country life.

Nevertheless, it is glitzy Waikiki that packs them in: fat women learning the hula, men in baseball caps sucking day-glo drinks, whiffs of coconut-oil sunscreen, tall palaces that sleep labelled conventions and serve dinner at six, stretched limos, souvenirs made in Taiwan, acres of cheerful shirts and a packed beach reddening bikini-clad cheeks by unshaven jowls. Lots of people have a great time.

In the neighbour islands, low-rise, discreet high-quality hotels have of late been dwarfed by strident establishments competing through size and gimmickry for recognition as (their words) "self-contained fantasy resorts" or Disneyland lookalikes, according to taste.

We had sampled them last year. At the Hyatt Regency, Waikoloa, on the Big Island, we commuted from room to lobby on the monorail train and a "gondola" that glides on a track submerged in a man-made lagoon; alas, the "dolphin encounter" was over-subscribed.

The 850-room Westin Kaula had taken a different route over the top, immense reflecting pools were presided over by monumental leaping horses and embraced by Athenian columns and porticoes.

Thus it was that this year, house-sitting in our usual Honolulu base-camp below Diamond Head, we learned with apprehension that the Lodge at Koele resembled "a genteel country estate" with "both English and American croquet courts," bowls and a great hall.

Happily, forebodings of pretension were dissolved by reality. A cool 1,700 feet up, the lodge low lodge has the bearing of a colonial plantation house. At its heart, the hall is, we had to concede, well... grand - a heavily-timbered, lofty sanctum with two-storey, log-burning fireplaces at each end.

Its trappings look like a lifetime's assembly from a score of ports: a triumph of Filipino, Victorian and Chinese treasures harmonised with a cacophony of rattan and antique furniture, carpets, mirrors, lamps, paintings and screens.

The delicate cuisine and the gracious turn-of-the-century New England-style bedrooms prompted civility as to whose taste and confidence were directing the island's new master plan. (It seemed churlish to wonder whether a library plus tea, trophy and music rooms, not to mention butler-serviced suites, did not imply a touch of over-the-top luxury.)

You do not wait long for the answer. To the sound of rending forelocks, one word drops from every tongue: Murdock.

David Howard Murdock is chairman and chief executive officer of Castle and Cooke. He controls and aggressively directs this old Hawaiian company, which means he holds the destiny of Lanai and its 2,300 inhabitants in his palm. For Castle and Cooke owns all but 2 per cent of the island; its subsidiary, Dole Food, built its past on pineapples and paternalism.

When Murdock bought in six years ago he effectively appointed himself squire and lord of the manor of a near-fabled community, albeit somewhat in absentia in the Los Angeles office from which he conducts the enterprises that have made him one of America's richest men.

He is who has decreed that Lanai pineapples no longer pay and that the island, and the islanders, will henceforth turn to the care of visitors, plus some diversification of agriculture.

This is to be achieved with two hotels and two championship golf courses girded by some 700 dream homes. The 102-room Lodge, opened last year, has just been complemented by the Menele Bay Hotel, nine miles away above the white sand, coral and clear water of the best beach, at Hulope Bay. It has 250 rooms and evokes a Mediterranean style, with winter views of whales spouting and diving. The two run in tandem. Guests move between them at will for a change of scene, ambience, golf course and temperature, signing for everything.

The golf courses promise to be spectacular even by the standards of Hawaii's plethora of sweeping, velvety greens. At Koele we saw the Greg Norman's first American design nearing completion, sculpted along a high, often misty plateau with ocean views and named Lanai City. This grid of modest streets is lined with humble, ageing bungalows with cool tin roofs and cluttered, tiny gardens. Its hottest spot is a simple clapboard hostelry, used by Jim Dole for company guests after the pineapple king bought the island in 1922. In recent years its ten bedrooms have accommodated the hunters who come in pursuit of the abounding axis deer.

David Murdock's apparent sensitivity and enlightenment extends to encouraging local artists to contribute paintings and murals to the hotels and to obsession with a large organic garden. Yet he is assailed by much scepticism, muted among Lanaians beholden to him and the company but clearly expressed in the Honolulu and national media.

Fears persist for the identity and nature of the island and its people, fading spectres of ice-cream parlours, shopping malls, McDonalds, hot-shirt shops and souvenir stalls. In Lanai City, where doors are rarely locked, heads are shaken at the thought of a virtually doubled population neatly bisected into a serving class and the ultra-rich, for this tropical paradise will not be for the impecunious. Daily room and suite rates already zoom from around $300 to nearly $1,000; green fees will be $100 each, and the houses will be marketed around the world as second, maybe third or even fourth homes at upwards of $1m.

Will diffident, unaffected islanders be tainted by avarice? Will the family spirit of the pineapple fields survive, values change, cultures die, rents soar, the entirely underground water supply suffice?

The most potent of all the speculation has Murdock ripening Lanai for sale, probably to the Japanese. Piercing the Murdock PR armour is difficult ("Mr Murdock only gives one interview a year and he's done that," his spokeswoman told me). However, a Honolulu columnist provided him into an indignant denial some months ago.

The deluge of Japanese money raining down on Hawaiian hotels, golf courses and real estate is already controversial locally. As a result, speculation that they might acquire a whole island in a year when preparations are under way for the commemoration of Pearl Harbour is seen as macabre and rumoured to be potentially embarrassing to the Japanese government.

Air New Zealand flies from Gatwick to Honolulu via L.A. Several American carriers connect from various points in mainland US. Lanai airport has been upgraded to take jets.

In London, the Hawaiian Travel Centre has a brochure and plenty of information, and also organises tailor-made holidays, including trips to Lanai: Marble Arch House, 66-68, Seymour St, W1H 8AP. Tel: 071-706-4142, fax: 071-724-9883.

Will money win out over pineapples in sleepy Lanai? wonders Alan Ponsford

Riders of the ridge

IT CAN never be said of the border between France and Spain that it was a mere cartographer's whim. No neat, straight lines here. The Pyrenean massif is an indistinctly jagged band of granite some 280 miles long and a variable 40 miles wide, and the frontier unerringly follows its principal watershed.

It creates a ragged maze of valleys, ridges and mountain peaks stretching from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean like a welder's seam, secreting within its folds the pocket-sized cultures of its ancient communities.

To cycle along the length of the massif is not everybody's idea of a jaunt in the countryside, and in truth, the prospect incited a paradox of emotions. But the reality soon proved its worth with rewards of flawless vistas, unprovoked gestures of local hospitality, carless back-roads and the wanton exhilaration of plummeting 3,000 feet on two belts of rubber.

We began at the Atlantic port of St Jean de Luz on the Basque coast and passed a couple of days in the foothills grinding our loins for the more demanding terrain.

The individuality of the Basques is strongly felt: the half-free-standing wall of the half-gate towers like a shrine at the core of every village; place names are repeated in a language that contains more zeds than a beehive, and regional cuisine boasts an array of traditional recipes including a cake with the texture of vulcanised rubber. (Generally, the mountains proved to conceal a trove of gastronomic delights).

Stepped in homely comfort and the pungent aroma of roast beef, the Vieux Auberge at Port-de-Lanne brandishes a menu set to thwart the most rapacious of appetites.

After that, we plunged into the heart of the mountains to confront the first hurdle, the Col d'Aubisque, only to be assaulted half-way up by a thunderstorm and a disheartening sequence of solitary road-side signs. They stated, quite simply: bronchitis, sinusitis, pharyngitis, and nez gorge (literally "saturated nose"). It is thus that the ailing thermal station of Baux Bonnes proceeds itself. Flashed down by the deluge in a hotel with sagging balconies and choked bedrooms, we decided to bolster our health in traditional mode by taking the waters.

The baths were grandiose: columns, arches, gleaming marble floors, busts of local worthies. Beneath the words Vieux Source picked out in stained glass, a cheerful assistant thrust steaming tumblers into our hands and bade us drink. The water contains an array of invigorating substances but sulphur is the prime ingredient, aided, it is claimed, by a somewhat dubious brew of inert gases and thermal plankton.

The flavour was unspeakable. Reinforced by long immersion in a bubbling cauldron of the same, there was no doubt that for several days our group could be tracked over the mountain-tops by the rank odour of rotten eggs seeping from our bodies.

The French have an innate love of the cyclist - nourished annually by the Tour de France. Hoteliers entreated us to wheel our valued steeds across their immaculate dining room floors. Indeed, in one hotel they remained throughout breakfast. Drivers drew alongside on the long climbs bellowing encouragement or technical queries such as "Combien des vitesses?" whilst staring avidly at our gear-sets. And in the paterfamilie at Masset the jovial owner sloshed liberal quantities of rum on our babies to fuel an attack on the Col de Port.

In the picturesque abbey village of St Savin, where we stayed at a hotel policed by two geriatric sheepdogs, the ultimate homage was paid. A coach-load of grizzled men on the Lourdes circuit clustered around the bikes, blissfully indifferent to their various infirmities, counting cog teeth and guessing frame weights.

Biking is primarily a male obsession. On a Sunday morning, climbing the forested switch-backs of the Col d'Aspin, we were overtaken by strings of middle-aged businessmen with fanatical expressions on state-of-the-art racers. They were met on the col by their patient wives who whisked them away, sacrificing the prize of the descent for the traditional Sunday lunch.

Among the arrivals was a couple from Watford on a tandem. A tandem is the sort of ungainly beast that tends to incite the derision of other cycling enthusiasts, but this one was no laggard; indeed, it was handled by a skilled maniac. As he hissed down the other side glowing over the velocities flickering on our cyclocomputers, the tandem eased up and, with a hearty cry, sped past on the outer corner of a hairpin bend before disappearing from view. There was a momentary glimpse of the girl glued to the rear saddle, either high on tranquillizers or frozen in terror.

At the foot of the col in St Marie-de-Campan we eyed with respect a stone plaque commemorating a hero of the Tour de France. In 1913 Eugene Christophe damaged his frame on the Col de Tourmalet. Unable, under the old rules, to receive any assistance, he carried the crippled bike down into the village, sought out the blacksmith, borrowed his forge and under his guidance repaired the frame. He still managed second place. It was an act, as the plaque says, of "sublime willpower."

Certainly the infamous climb up to the Col de Tourmalet is no light undertaking, involving a 4,000 ft ascent. Nor is it especially pretty: a barren, treeless valley scarred by haggard out-of-season ridges and topped by a desolate cutting. But among the endless messages of "Bon Courage" and "Bon Aller" daubed on the tarmac for the benefit of Tour de France competitors, a large incongruous "On Yer Bike Tebbi" raised a laugh.

Some cols induced a state of euphoria, such as the lovely foresterie up to the Col d'Artigason, a single-track lane that tortuously claws its way out of a steep, tight valley before abruptly disgorging into rubble, but which affords alluring views of distant jagged peaks.

Others were to be savoured. The gentle meandering ascent out of the Vallée de Bethmale took in deliciously dozy villages where rural dwellings remain ungentrified. Encounters with livestock were frequent.

Over the Col d'Aussieres we burst abruptly into a new world of wild fig, olive groves, prickly pears, herbs and mountain flowers. Slates gave way to pantiles, and the Tramontane gusted up the valley, harsh and fragrant. We were left in no doubt that beyond lay the Mediterranean.

Down we cycled, into French Catalonia, along scarred roads of vineyard terraces, past trailers trundling to the press through small fortified villages huddled on their mounts and dominated by church bellies. And so, after a thoroughly gratifying trip, we met the roar, bustle, heat and grime of Perpignan. We glanced somewhat wistfully at the tranquil peaks of the Pyrenees which seemed to beckon knowingly for our return. After all, there is always the Spanish side.

Jonathan Hollins cycles over the French Pyrenees

SHOOTING

GROUSE SHOOTINGS TO LET

North of England, due to cancellation, travelling syndicate has vacancy for 3 guns on 30th/31st August & 6 guns on 14th September. Contact: N. Ineson (05242) 71711. Fax: (05242) 72212

VILLAS

Continental villas. Luxurious private villas with pools. USA, Italy, Spain, France, Greece, Portugal, West Indies. For a FREE colour brochure please call 071 497 0444 (24 hours) 3 Crown West London WC2H 8PW ABTA 80919. APTA 1886 probably the best villas & apts available many with pools. Italian Chapters. Tel 071 722 9560 ABTA A8234.

TUSCANY

TUSCANY

COMING UP!

AUG 3RD PREPARING FOR THE "GLORIOUS 12TH"

The Weekend FT goes shooting & fishing - country pursuits galore!

AUG 31ST GOLFING

- to coincide with the European Open we explore the best places to play, both home & abroad.

SEPT 28TH THE SUPPLEMENT

Essential Hotels, European, International & skiing brochure panels with relevant editorial.

TO ADVERTISE IN ALL OR ANY ONE OF THESE FEATURES CALL

DENISE MORRICE 071-407 5753

OR CLARE PEASNEILL 071-407 5755

SPECIAL INTEREST

SHANNON ANGLING

Salmon and trout fishing in Ireland. "Aldine/Ferry tickets and Grade A Hotel... excellent seasonal records". Ref: Trout & Salmon Magazine Nov. 90. Shannon Tip. Shannon Angling & Country Sports. Kilmora House, Catherine Place, Limerick, Ireland. Tel: 353-61-48410 Fax: 353-61-48431

TWICKERS WORLD

The natural world. The Soudan Mole Bites India's oldest elephant hair. A stimulating 10 day tour visiting India's oldest elephant hair at Soudan plus Delhi, Jaipur, Agra, Panna, Calcutta and Bombay with de luxe accommodation, fine food and a fresh approach to sightseeing, revealing the drama, colour, architectural and cultural splendours of India. Escorted from London, 15 Nov 1991. Price from £2565 full board. 32 Church Street, Twickenham, TW9 3PP. 081-892 8164. 14 hour brochure service. 011-892 7851. ABTA 60340

FLIGHTS

LOW COST FLIGHTS

AMSTERDAM	£118	LYON	£118
BAGDAD	£128	MADRID	£128
BAGDAD	£128	MARSEILLE	£128
BELIN	£145	MUNICH	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	NAPLES	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	PARIS	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	PORTO	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	ROME	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	STOCKHOLM	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	TORONTO	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	VENICE	£145
BIRMINGHAM	£145	ZURICH	£145

HOLIDAYMAKER

071 734 3737

BUSINESS TRAVEL DISCOUNTS

All flights and holidays discounted (Fares, Club & Economy). The more you travel and we will by return. For complete brochure call: 0800 222 222. HARRIS 0454500. NEW YORK 0454500.

DISCOUNT FARES

In 1st Class, Club & Economy Class. Also Concorde. For the best guaranteed deals. Please contact the experts. 071-439 2944. Fax 071-754 2242. Pan Express Travel.

FRANCE

Walking Holidays in France

SHERPA EXPEDITIONS. A blend of gentle exercise and sheer self-indulgence, walking from inn to inn through France. We provide you with walking notes, book your hotels and transport your baggage. You enjoy the countryside and the cuisine. Prices start from only $185. Choose from 20 superb walks. From 4 days to a fortnight. 081-577 7187 24 HRS. Dept FTW, 131a Heston Rd, Hounslow, Middx.

LES MAISONS DOREES

THE DORDOGNE EXPERIENCE. IN THE MOST BEAUTIFUL PART OF FRANCE. A GOURMET SELECTION OF LUXURIOUS CHARACTER HOUSES. ALL SET IN IDYLIC SCENERY. ENJOY THIS REGION ALL YEAR - FOUR LE VIEUX CONNAISSEUR. FOR RESERVATIONS, ENQUIRIES & BROCHURES CALL UK FREEPHONE NOW - 0800 879745. LE ONLY SPECIALISTS RESIDENT IN DORDOGNE. LE ROUTIER, 2620 ST CYPRIN, FRANCE. TEL: (01033) 53 294193 FAX (01033) 53 28254

QUALITY VILLAS

We offer the finest collection of luxury villas with private pools in the South of France - including Chateau de la Daurade. All are personally selected and inspected by us. La Premiere Quality Villa. 011-892 7851. ABTA 60340

UK

Glorious Goodwood's Hottest Tip!

The South Lodge Hotel, Lower Basing, West Sussex. Telephone: 0430 851711

THE FRENCH SELECTION

offers 100 superb hotels and chateaux off the beaten track. The French Selection, Chester Close, London SW1X 7BQ, ABTA 8074. ATTO: 071-235 8634. FRENCH PREMIER, WALKING and Mountain-Biking with local French Guides. All levels. Scheduled flights. Call NOW for remaining availability. 01033 655555. BOUTIQUE HOLS.

ITALY

Let your body take a holiday

Whilst enjoying good quality hotels and excellent cuisine, why not ease your aches and pains with the famous Fango mud treatments or Thalassotherapy as well as Health, Beauty and Fitness Courses. ABTA, MONTESOTTO, ISCHIA, IN ITALY. YVERDON IN SWITZERLAND. BIANZATE IN FRANCE. Scheduled flights from Heathrow or Gatwick and regional airports. Private car transfers included. FOR FREE COLOUR BROCHURE CONTACT: dwards of Westminster Limited. 276 PRESTON ROAD, HARBOR, HAS COA. TEL: 081-904 2202. 24 hr emergency 081-905 1515

EXPRESS

Talk-made packages to hotels of character throughout France. Self-drive and fly-drive all year round. Plus honeymoon, golf & gemmology. 011-794-1480

THE FRENCH SELECTION

offers 100 superb hotels and chateaux off the beaten track. The French Selection, Chester Close, London SW1X 7BQ, ABTA 8074. ATTO: 071-235 8634. FRENCH PREMIER, WALKING and Mountain-Biking with local French Guides. All levels. Scheduled flights. Call NOW for remaining availability. 01033 655555. BOUTIQUE HOLS.

ITALY

Let your body take a holiday

Whilst enjoying good quality hotels and excellent cuisine, why not ease your aches and pains with the famous Fango mud treatments or Thalassotherapy as well as Health, Beauty and Fitness Courses. ABTA, MONTESOTTO, ISCHIA, IN ITALY. YVERDON IN SWITZERLAND. BIANZATE IN FRANCE. Scheduled flights from Heathrow or Gatwick and regional airports. Private car transfers included. FOR FREE COLOUR BROCHURE CONTACT: dwards of Westminster Limited. 276 PRESTON ROAD, HARBOR, HAS COA. TEL: 081-904 2202. 24 hr emergency 081-905 1515

ARTS

Spaniard tops the bill in Avignon

THE 45th Avignon Festival of the performing arts opens on July 9. In recent years this festival, directed by Alain Crombeque, has refused to rest on the laurels of the classical French dramatic heritage, beloved of its founder Jean Vilar. It is a long time since there was a production at Avignon of either Racine or Corneille. Last year's concession to the great tradition was a suitably sombre production of Les Fourberies de Scapin, and that was the first work by Molière to be seen as part of the official Festival for a very long time. You are much more likely to witness a Spanish classic like La Celestina, a play by Shakespeare, Lessing or Kleist.

This year is no exception. The Festival will begin with a work now called in French Comedies Barbares. It lasts for two long nights, described illogically as Première Journée and Deuxième Journée. This is a translation and adaptation by Armando Llanas, of the Spanish dramatic trilogy Comedias Barbares by Ramón María del Valle-Inclán, to be directed by Jorge Lavelli for the Théâtre National de la Colline.

The original consists of three novels in dramatic form about a Galician Don Juan, last of the feudal lords, the whole over-flowing with baroque and violent comedias have never been presented in their entirety anywhere before.

I shall be attending and reporting on this event along with other major productions of the Festival. But in the meantime who is he being seconded in this singular honour of a full-scale production in the Courtyard of the Papal Palace?

Ramón was a Spaniard from Alos, Galicia born in 1866 who, as Gerald Brennan puts it, "turned up in Madrid and took his seat among the young writers in the cafes. He was very fantastic to look at, with a long, black, goat-like beard, not unlike the portrait of Lytton Strachey... but his conversation was even more fantastic than his appearance. Nothing could be gathered of his antecedents - for his stories about himself were too extravagant to be believed - except that he had spent some time in Mexico."

Even his name seems unlikely to have been the one he was born with. It was modelled on that of the French symbolist, Villiers de l'Isle-Adam who was one of his heroes. Ramón's first book to win him notoriety was the Sonatas, four long stories about the amorous conquests of the Marquis de Bradamini, each one corresponding to a different season of the year - betrays the influence of his hero and of the fin-de-siècle ambience. In all, Ramón wrote 24 plays, 14 novels, seven story collections, three books of poems, and many translations. He married the actress Josefina Blanco and worked with her as a director and a playwright.

Valle-Inclán belonged to that famous Generation of 1898 that had such a far-reaching regenerative effect on modern Spanish literature. We can see him as both a precursor of Brecht and of modern magical realism. He found a rich source of inspiration in Spanish history particularly that of the Canary War of 1870 which served for several of his plots. His dialogue has at its best been described as being like flashes of lightning.

Experts on Spanish writing such as Brennan and Robert Lima his most recent champion in Valle-Inclán: The Theatre of His Life are undecided about which are his best plays but both rate highly the Esperpentos and the Fueros with their severe strictures on militarism and the exaggerated Spanish code of honour. They also single out for praise the baroque comedies. Their performance in Provence is thus eagerly awaited.

Other playwrights who will be performed as part of the official programme (this year's Avignon Festival (which runs till August 2) include Heiner Müller, Sijacci, Novarina, Durr, Pieller, Pjander, Colin, Benedetto, Shakespeare. The festival brochure and booking form may be obtained from: Festival d'Avignon, Location par correspondance, BP 22, 84006 Avignon Cedex, France.

Anthony Curtis

WINES FROM FRANCE

Monthly deliveries to the UK, of excellent quality wines by the case. (Mainly Bordeaux) £3-£5 per bottle. Please fax for further information, including our full wine list. Fax: (01633) 46 91 91 (21 France).

Peter Hayward, whose Don Giovanni is a worthless, shallow optimist in Tim Albery's staging of Mozart's opera

Blurred deconstruction of The Don

Andrew Clements reviews Opera North's new production

FOLLOWING CLOSE behind his powerful, disturbing vision of Peter Grimes for English National Opera, Tim Albery's staging of Don Giovanni for Opera North is a similarly dark, dark-hued experience, but disturbing for entirely different reasons. With designer Ashley Martin-Davies, the world that he conjures for Mozart's dramatic gloves is baffling and tenebrous, peppered with opaque imagery and with what appear at first view to be half-digested ideas. In place of the gleaming bright visions that characterised much of his earlier opera work there is nightmarish chaos; when things fall apart as they do for Don Giovanni, it all suggests, there's no use pretending that they'll collapse in a prettily ordered, ingratiating way.

In Albery's deconstruction exterior and interior are blurred just as effectively as period and place. Painted backdrops hint sometimes at Mediterranean landscape, a lurid sun descends to burn behind Anna and Ottavio during their colloquies, but the stage is dominated by a ramp that curves up to the right, a wall-of-death down which characters can slide (as in Elvira's first entry), or propel themselves more manically into the fray.

Delapidated armchairs furnish the space, providing safe havens for the characters - while Giovanni and Leporello dupe Elvira at the beginning of Act 2, the others are jostling around only a few feet away - formalising the dramatic shape for ensembles, or used simply as a way of purging the production of any traditional stage business. Giovanni eats his dinner (bread and wine) facing the audience in his armchair, and invites the Commendatore to do the same, so that they look like nothing less than pair of OAPs sitting to a frugal supper.

But there is a lack of coherence to the images, too much cross-cutting between them, and at times a simple dramatic logic, which finally fails to connect with a believable or rewarding dramatic world. Giovanni sings the Champagne Aria while dressing for the party that follows, carefully applying lipstick, rouge and eyeliner before slipping into a red evening dress; is that just a bit of fun (there's not much else in the production that is) or a serious suggestion that this is a man whose sexuality is utterly confused? The production never makes it clear, and similar, half-way interesting themes fit in and out of focus through the evening.

Robert Hayward plays Giovanni as a worthless, shallow opportunist, whose relationship with Leporello is based on a mixture of violence and homophobia, and who sang, like the majority of the cast, with more efficiency than musical style. Reductive in particular got short shrift, sometimes relegated to toneless patter or approximate Sprechgesang and never delivered with meaningful point; John Hall's Leporello is the main culprit, though there are hints elsewhere in his performance of a character far more fully comprehended than others in the cast. Both Helen Field's Anna and Jane Leslie Mackenzie's Elvira began uncertainly but gained steadily in musical assurance; Paul Nilon's Ottavio was a baffled, impatient supernumerary, who clearly could never quite come to terms with the emotional weight in which he found himself. There was a strong, uncomplicated Masetto from Peter Supp, tremulous Zerlina from Lynne Davies, and solid, unwavering Commendatore from Sean Rea.

The new production, sponsored by IBM UK Ltd, inaugurated Opera North's first visit to the newly refurbished Lyceum Theatre in Sheffield. It is a delightful, intimate auditorium, ideally suited to Mozart; voices project easily. The orchestra pit appears ample, and Paul Daniel conducted the score in overdrive, producing a coarse-grained texture that alternated with a laboured espresso. The tension sagged badly in the middle of the first act, only to pull itself together for the finale. That really is Albery's single coup of the evening, a set-piece of threatening dissolution, with leering, groping guests who paw and pick at the masked strangers, and which runs rapidly out of control. But tearing the moral fabric into shreds is not enough, and the second act fails to elaborate or enhance the metaphor.

receptive blinding central interpretations from Irek Mukhamedov. His genius is for extreme dramatic clarity allied to extreme physical power, and his Ivan is splendidly the tyrant, a mad visionary for whom Natalya Besmertnova's lumbent Anastasia is the only hope of heaven. His Boris is all ardour for Besmertnova's iconic Juliet; his Spartacus marvellously combines the heroic and the human, and he has a most touching Phrygia in Lyudmila Semenyaka, their duets intense in feeling as in physical shape. In all three ballets the Bolshoy's artists wear us through Grigorovich's choreographic patterns - the huge dimensions of the stage, the urgency of the dance-style and the passionate involvement of the orchestra under Algis Zauraitis compelling belief.

There is also a welcome recording of Grigorovich's Stone Flower, with its understated Prokofiev score. It was with this staging that the Kirov Ballet made its London debut in 1961. Its narrative is a gloss on the theme of The Fairy's Kiss and tells of a stone-cutter who must reconcile art with social (and socialist) duty. It may seem politically naïf to remember Soviet art in the 1960s - but Grigorovich managed to produce big classic ensembles, and an extended fair-scene that is the ultimate Russian folk dance. The staging looked markedly innovative in 1961; even now there are imperishable memories of the angelic Yuri Solovoy, of Alla Shova and Alla Osipenko in its leading roles. This new recording brings an unfamiliar but sincere hero in Nikolay Dorokhov, a radiantly innocent and exquisitely danced heroine from Lyudmila Semenyaka, and a commanding account of the magical Mistress of the Copper Mountain from Nina Semikova. And the big fair scene in Act II suggests what the Bolshoy could make of Fokine's Petrushka. Pickwick Video, though, lets down its public by providing cursory and far-too-generalised records of the stage action for these issues. Proper programme notes are a courtesy, but a necessity owed to audiences.

The Swan Lake is dull in that its leading figures, Alla Mikhailchenko and Yuri Vasyuchenko, seem uninvolved with the drama or with each other. The huge outlines of the production, in swans and courtiers, are fine, but they frame a void. Three of Grigorovich's most popular creations - Ivan the Terrible, Spartacus, Romeo and Juliet - who helped shape and sustain the Kirov as an art in an era of immense difficulties. The merits and sometimes insurmountable problems of these recordings are typified in the Sleeping Beauty film. Grigorovich's love for his Kirov inheritance (he is a Leningrader by birth and training) is clear in the respect he shows for Beauty's text and structure. On the Bolshoy stage Petipa is honoured as the dance breathes, opens grandly out. Nina Semizorova is a brilliant if slightly un-mannered Aurora; Alexey Fadeychev is a princely Florindund at every moment. Nina Speranskaya is a radiant Lilac Fairy, and in Yuri Vetrov I am happy to find again the greatest Carabosse I have ever seen, his reading a magnificent combination of bile, malicious glee and blazing authority.

But against the expansive grace of the company style and the orchestral playing under Alexander Koplov, we must set the obtuse ideas of the Japanese director and producer, with camera angles and cutting that can be at times bizarre, with a quaint belief that curtain calls are to be savoured rather than elided in the editing room. These faults are at their worst in Beauty, the remaining Bolshoy videos seem less arbitrary (though not all faultless) in the Japanese idea of what to preserve and what to miss.

The Swan Lake is dull in that its leading figures, Alla Mikhailchenko and Yuri Vasyuchenko, seem uninvolved with the drama or with each other. The huge outlines of the production, in swans and courtiers, are fine, but they frame a void. Three of Grigorovich's most popular creations - Ivan the Terrible, Spartacus, Romeo and Juliet - to terms with the emotional weight in which he found himself. There was a strong, uncomplicated Masetto from Peter Supp, tremulous Zerlina from Lynne Davies, and solid, unwavering Commendatore from Sean Rea.

The new production, sponsored by IBM UK Ltd, inaugurated Opera North's first visit to the newly refurbished Lyceum Theatre in Sheffield. It is a delightful, intimate auditorium, ideally suited to Mozart; voices project easily. The orchestra pit appears ample, and Paul Daniel conducted the score in overdrive, producing a coarse-grained texture that alternated with a laboured espresso. The tension sagged badly in the middle of the first act, only to pull itself together for the finale. That really is Albery's single coup of the evening, a set-piece of threatening dissolution, with leering, groping guests who paw and pick at the masked strangers, and which runs rapidly out of control. But tearing the moral fabric into shreds is not enough, and the second act fails to elaborate or enhance the metaphor.

receptive blinding central interpretations from Irek Mukhamedov. His genius is for extreme dramatic clarity allied to extreme physical power, and his Ivan is splendidly the tyrant, a mad visionary for whom Natalya Besmertnova's lumbent Anastasia is the only hope of heaven. His Boris is all ardour for Besmertnova's iconic Juliet; his Spartacus marvellously combines the heroic and the human, and he has a most touching Phrygia in Lyudmila Semenyaka, their duets intense in feeling as in physical shape. In all three ballets the Bolshoy's artists wear us through Grigorovich's choreographic patterns - the huge dimensions of the stage, the urgency of the dance-style and the passionate involvement of the orchestra under Algis Zauraitis compelling belief.

There is also a welcome recording of Grigorovich's Stone Flower, with its understated Prokofiev score. It was with this staging that the Kirov Ballet made its London debut in 1961. Its narrative is a gloss on the theme of The Fairy's Kiss and tells of a stone-cutter who must reconcile art with social (and socialist) duty. It may seem politically naïf to remember Soviet art in the 1960s - but Grigorovich managed to produce big classic ensembles, and an extended fair-scene that is the ultimate Russian folk dance. The staging looked markedly innovative in 1961; even now there are imperishable memories of the angelic Yuri Solovoy, of Alla Shova and Alla Osipenko in its leading roles. This new recording brings an unfamiliar but sincere hero in Nikolay Dorokhov, a radiantly innocent and exquisitely danced heroine from Lyudmila Semenyaka, and a commanding account of the magical Mistress of the Copper Mountain from Nina Semikova. And the big fair scene in Act II suggests what the Bolshoy could make of Fokine's Petrushka. Pickwick Video, though, lets down its public by providing cursory and far-too-generalised records of the stage action for these issues. Proper programme notes are a courtesy, but a necessity owed to audiences.

The Swan Lake is dull in that its leading figures, Alla Mikhailchenko and Yuri Vasyuchenko, seem uninvolved with the drama or with each other. The huge outlines of the production, in swans and courtiers, are fine, but they frame a void. Three of Grigorovich's most popular creations - Ivan the Terrible, Spartacus, Romeo and Juliet - who helped shape and sustain the Kirov as an art in an era of immense difficulties. The merits and sometimes insurmountable problems of these recordings are typified in the Sleeping Beauty film. Grigorovich's love for his Kirov inheritance (he is a Leningrader by birth and training) is clear in the respect he shows for Beauty's text and structure. On the Bolshoy stage Petipa is honoured as the dance breathes, opens grandly out. Nina Semizorova is a brilliant if slightly un-mannered Aurora; Alexey Fadeychev is a princely Florindund at every moment. Nina Speranskaya is a radiant Lilac Fairy, and in Yuri Vetrov I am happy to find again the greatest Carabosse I have ever seen, his reading a magnificent combination of bile, malicious glee and blazing authority.

But against the expansive grace of the company style and the orchestral playing under Alexander Koplov, we must set the obtuse ideas of the Japanese director and producer, with camera angles and cutting that can be at times bizarre, with a quaint belief that curtain calls are to be savoured rather than elided in the editing room. These faults are at their worst in Beauty, the remaining Bolshoy videos seem less arbitrary (though not all faultless) in the Japanese idea of what to preserve and what to miss.

The Swan Lake is dull in that its leading figures, Alla Mikhailchenko and Yuri Vasyuchenko, seem uninvolved with the drama or with each other. The huge outlines of the production, in swans and courtiers, are fine, but they frame a void. Three of Grigorovich's most popular creations - Ivan the Terrible, Spartacus, Romeo and Juliet -

Brilliant ballet out of building blocks

AS HAROLD Lander's Studes races headlong to its close, with pikes and spurs, hoots and howls, and a crowd on each other, we can sense the dancers' adrenalin flowing. We can feel our own adrenalin flowing, so vivid the communication of helter-skelter excitement. Studes is enormously clever in making ballet out of the building blocks of mere exercise - imagine a concert piece created from scales and arpeggios - and given with the verve that English National Ballet showed on Thursday night at the Coliseum, it is an interesting sight. The key to its ultimate success, though, must lie with its three stars, and in Yelena Pankova, Thomas Edur and Jose Manuel Carrero we have an ideal cast.

Harold Lander's tribute to his own Danish inheritance is a little Romantic sequence wherein the ballerina must seem like the Sybil. This Pankova does with such bewitching charm - and such wistful eyebrows - that ENS must surely revive Bour-ville's Sybilide for her, with Edur, noble, elegant, sincere, as her James. For the bravura moments that follow, Pankova produces both the technical fizz and the stylistic distinction to convince us that this is the best champagne.

Edur is also revealed as a virtuoso for whom grace of means - steps beautifully light and secure; manner aristocratic - is as important as prowess. His colleague, Carrero, matches him at every arduous moment, and provides a vivid contrast of Latin fire to set the dance crackling with temperament. Long ago, Pankova and Carrero were a prodigious cast with Turi Lander, Flemming Flindt and John Gilpin. This present trio is no less splendid.

This triple bill had as its centre Christopher Bruce's Studes. Though I find the ballet too extended for its own good, there can be no gainsaying the admirable force with which Koen Onda as the prisoner, Mats Skoog and Kevin Richmond as the jailers, go through the exhausting procedures of interrogation and sadistic teasing. Done thus, with hair-trigger alertness and unflinching physical skill, the drama is marvellously played by its cast. An intriguing sidelight on the piece - whose theme had heretofore seemed clear - comes with a programme note from Mr Bruce, in which he identifies a subplot concerned with a dancer's eventual need to cease performing, to find the exit from his career that the prisoner finds in this staging.

About Ben Stevenson's Four Last Songs which completes the programme, little needs to be said. Richard Strauss's valuations have led Stevenson to produce dances that look like a suicide pact taken by a troupe of depressive acrobats. Turgid, hideously designed, sodden with spurious emotions, this is an exercise in fake piety and maudlin sentiment which does not even have the merit of being full-blooded kitsch. It is a pathetic anachronism as choreography, and it makes its cast look fatally debilitated.

Clement Crisp

THIS YEAR'S Orkney Festival celebrated the 70th birthday of the island's Laureate, the poet George Mackay Brown. Sons of Light, his historical history of Orkney to music by Peter Maxwell Davies, concluded events; local actors paid tribute with two plays: Witch, his grimly enacted tale of medieval scapegoats; and a nicely lit production of The Road to Colonsay, with Alan Watt as an Oedipus/Everyman figure groping his way towards hope of salvation. Overtones of Yeats recalled his Celtic affinities rather than the Norse affiliations of his other work.

His publishers John Murray have just issued a new volume, Selected Poetry 1954-1983 (£12.95), a personal choice by Mackay Brown. The book is a collection of his writing not easily available hitherto.

Those unaware of Brown's writings - four novels (a fifth reached the publishers last week) have a treat in store. Partly an income ("Brown" is Scottish; his mother was a Scottish Gaelic-speaker), George Mackay Brown is Orkney's most astute and articulate, though by no means only, voice. It is, however, a rich and unique voice. Not all Orkadians identify with it. He is stauncher at championing others' work (Rendall, Linklater, Edwin Muir) than his own, with which he frequently proclaims disaffection, disavowing or asking whole passages. There are a few significant omissions and some changes, though small, in these reprints. The occasional poem, like

Poet of the Orkney people

"Jars" from The Wreck of the Arkangel has escaped the self-censure.

His craggy style, often encapsulated in short, Heidegger-like stanzas, is instantly recognised and as easily parodied: "Southern scythes leaned at the wall/leaves upon golden beads". "And the boy found a wild bees' comb/And his mouse was a southern brightness". "A spit of rain and a gull/in the open door, /Tinklers at the door, /healing, with cans". "The road to the kirk/is a road of silences".

As a poet of place Brown has few equals. Orkney's people and history, authentic or not, leap into life, not just in his charting of the Norse Earls of Orkney (Gunnar and Macbeth), or the saint-hero of his second novel Magnus, whose parallels between twelfth and a Kafka-like 20th century socio-political convenience cry out for a growing readership, but in the oddly believable communities of his first novel Green Gables or the half dozen collections of stories, in style now less florid, yet still often prose poems, of which his latest batch, The Masked Fisherman, rivals A Time to Keep as its best yet.

Like Green Gables, his Buddenbrooks-style chronicle which prophesied an island community's dismembering mere months before Scapa Flow revealed its oil and uranium prospecting, threatened to scour the West Orkney Mainland, Magnus' and reconciles deep pessimism with a resurrection hope that springs, Elsie-like, from soil and seasons.

His real material is underfoot - that "underfoot of terrible holy joy" incarnated by norms in an early poem: brute patterns of work, cohesion, survival (few lived beyond that 50 in Orkney's medieval towns); interactions of individual, community and domicile anywhere, anytime; the cyclical continuum between the generations and mutual enabling of life and death; strange interweavings of religion and rite.

These are root images. The starkness of Eliot never loses its hold on Brown; Auden's epithets fade out amidst his own robust images. Amongst late poems it is the closing hatch, like his tribute to "William and Marson Clark, humpers" (the tripartite form recalls Auden on Yeats) which grip the most.

Windland is the new novel's current title; it suggests territory both old and new for Mackay Brown. Should it find favour with his publishers, there may yet be cause to celebrate his 71st.

Roderic Dunnott

Youth at the National

THE CURTAIN has just come down on the Royal National Theatre's third annual youth festival: the 1991 Lloyd's Bank Theatre Challenge. For three evenings this week the Olivier theatre staged nine productions, playing to packed houses. Nine plays were chosen from over 200 youth theatre groups which entered the scheme for the prize of playing on a national stage and working with professional actors, directors and producers.

It was the biggest night of their lives, but their nerves stood up. The actors seduced the audience with enthusiasm and their energetic productions stretched the capacity of the large stage. People and props flew around, spilling onto laps in the front row.

Most of the productions were highly idealistic. There were condemnations of US action in Vietnam, social attitudes to disability, the death penalty, and the treatment of young offenders. Several of the productions examined class. Three of the plays featured mothers weeping over sons destroyed by uncaring societies; and two opened with a young man clutching a ghetto blaster.

Of the nine, I found three outstanding. Beowulf Comes to Tiger Bay, a rap musical from the Fitzalan High School in Cardiff, is a forceful reminder that theatre can be fun. Most of the time an impromptu riot was happening on a stage. This was drama with a message which managed to avoid preaching through the exuberance of the 34-strong cast. A sharp-suited, ice cool narrator (Martin Cole) makes superb use of rap music to tell the story of how the "tribe" of Tiger Bay enlisted Beowulf to fight environmental degradation. A "wizard" (chairman of a multinational chemicals company) has cast a "chemical spell" over the residents of the Bay by promising them gold if they will let him use their water for his experiments. Mesmerised, they agree and the resulting effluent spawns two monsters who come out of the depths of the Bay to feed upon the terrified townsfolk.

The production, an ebullient subversion of traditional heroic epic, was an affirmation of women's strength. The heroine of this epic is a black woman; an African warrior, Lorraine Cole's confident, tough, black monoma dominated the stage. The audience loved her. Racial stereotypes exploded: "No need to panic!" Beowulf tells the white petitioner from Tiger Bay, "We're not going to eat you. What do you think we are? Savages?"

The simple three-piece set was evocative of the industrial wasteland which is Tiger Bay. Costumes underlined the multicultural nature of Beowulf and her warriors appeared mainly in African tribal garb. The monsters were huge puppets.

Another huge puppet starred in an adaptation of Oscar Wilde's The Selfish Giant from the Haymarket Young People's Theatre Leicester, one of the youngest companies. The giant, made of papier mache and floor mops, required five puppeteers. The cast's commitment saved this Christ myth from becoming schmaltz. There was little or no dialogue and there were no developed characters. The cast simply told the story in words and movement. The set consisted of that looked like metal coat stands (the trees); the actors wore black pyjama-like costumes.

Cathy Milton

ART GALLERIES

PICCADILLY GALLERY

16 Cook St., London W1X 1PF
Tel: 01 629 2875. Fax: 01 499 0431

AUGUSTUS JOHN

Paintings, Drawings & Bookings in association with Max Reinhardt

3rd July - 27th July 1991
Mon-Fri 10.00-5.30. Sat 10.00-12.30

THE LIVERPOOL GALLERY, 20 South Street,
London W1, 01-629-2071, 19 and 20th
Century Works in View. Tue-June 10am-6pm
July 10am-7pm. Mon-Fri 10am-5pm.

VERNE ANGL, 4 Ryder Street S.W.1, 01-755
2500 OLD MASTER PAINTINGS and July 10am-6pm.

FIELDS GALLERIES No. 63 Queens
Grove, St John Wood, 01-58 3028.
Nude Art, Sculpture, & other bronzes.
Until July 12th. Mon-Fri 10.30-5.30 Sat by appointment.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPICE

MARET, LONDON E8 5SA
(Charity Ref. No. 271323)

There is never a time in caring when no more can be given, no more can be said. Thank you for listening and for sharing often the joy of your giving with the gravity of patients in our care.

Sister Superior

